Tighter Migrant Worker Rules Urged

Portland — (U.P.) — State Labor Commissioner Norman Nilson today recommended a stiffening of standards for migrant labor camps in Oregon.

The recommendations to Gov. Robert Holmes followed an investigation last week into a Clackamas county situation after workers had been evicted and were cared for by welfare authorities.

Nilson suggested that closer liaison should be maintained between states "so that people will not come to Oregon expecting to be employed when jobs are non-existent, only to become wards of the state of welfare agencies."

He also said he had talked with growers and suggested establishment of a "code of ethics" which would include that all members comply with the labor, health and other laws pertaining to their operations.

Girl Scouts

Cave Junction — More than 50 Girl Scout adult leaders and committeewomen attended the Rogue Valley Area overnight training session Friday and Saturday at the new Girl Scout camp near Grayback park.

Troop leaders received qualifications during the training period, which will enable them to take their troops to the Camporee in June and on other overnight camps.

STORY OF DEFEAT

Taking his cue from last Saturday's Kentucky Derby Kennedy said: "I stood up in the saddle, and Sen. Estes Kefauver put a big nose between me and the 688 votes."

Shake Mill Bought By Bridgeview Man

Cave Junction—A shake mill on Rough and Ready flats, formerly known as "Casco War Products," has been purchased by Earl James of Bridgeview, who moved it this week to a new location on the Takilma rd. Former owner is Carl Spieth, an Illinois Valley real estate man.

The mill, which is to go into production immediately, will be operated by James, with the assistance of one or two employees. He plans to enlarge his output of cedar products by adding a portable mill which will make box shooks, battery stock and sawed fence posts.

As it now stands the mill is geared only for Hollywood shakes, but the portable rig is expected within the next two weeks.
