

Mrs. Graham Speaks Against Working Wives

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Correspondent

New York — Mrs. Billy Graham, who says "one speaker in the family is enough," spoke out today about working wives, happiness in marriage and juvenile crime.

"I just don't approve of the working wife," she said in an interview. "Except, of course, in the case of those who for financial reasons must work. But career in preference to a home?"

"So a job may mean a second car in the garage, or a mink coat. But something still will be missing."

Did she think the growing number of working women also might be a factor in the nation's high divorce rate? "Could be," said Ruth Graham. "I hadn't thought about it much... but tension has a lot to do with family arguments. If both husband and wife work, it means two people coming home tense."

Mrs. Graham believes religious training should begin early with children. "Check the statistics," she said, "and I think you'll find few juvenile delinquents come from homes where prayer is a part of the family's daily life."

She rarely makes public appearances. "One speaker in the family is enough," she said, and she usually does not accompany Graham on crusades.

She is not worried about the New York crusade, which has been under quiet but elaborate preparation for more than a year.

"New York is no worse than any other city," said Mrs. Graham. "It is just bigger."

"Some people think Billy is trying to change the city... it will be the same, but many lives will be changed, we hope."

"Even if it is just one life, it will have been worth it."

"Sometimes we underestimate the value of one soul."

Grownups Said Surrendering Their Leadership to Juveniles

By DAN HANLEY Jr.
United Press Correspondent

Green Bay, Wis. — This city's "Flying Nun," Sister Mary Aquinas, bluntly tells the nation what is wrong with present educational methods.

She said she has the cure. Sister Aquinas is supervisor of elementary education for the diocese of Green Bay, and in the past 10 years her workshop methods of educating youth have spread to 45 other Catholic dioceses and archdioceses through the country.

She said that unless children learn to love learning "juvenile delinquency will swallow up the country within 20 years."

"Grownups are fast surrendering their leadership to juveniles," she said. "If grownups fail to lead them, they will be led to juvenile goals of living."

This nun is a rarity in the religious world. In 1943, she was asked to teach a pre-flight course at Catholic University, Washington, D.C. She left St. Ambrose High school at Ironwood, Mich., where she had been a crack instructor in aerodynamics and led 17 classes through the basic pre-flight rigors before they were sent to flight school.

At Catholic U., she applied her workshop theories of education, and textbooks got help from practical applications of blue prints, activities, models, real planes, buildings, machines and communications equipment.

"In the workshop method of teaching," she said, "individual differences are best served. The more talented are challenged, and leaders are developed."

Sister Aquinas thinks, too, that teachers are best served through the workshop method. "Children learn both by doing and by instruction," she said. "The fullness of educational research is realized in the workshop classrooms."

Sister Aquinas, who always wanted to be a teacher, was graduated as an honor student from the Zanesville, O., High School at 16. She then entered the convent.

In the early 1940's she prepared herself for teaching aerodynamics, a course the government was pressing to have taught, by learning to fly and getting a license. She even learned intricate aerial maneuvers. This led to the Washington assignment.

"There is nothing to fear in flying except fear itself," she said, "and I never had any."

When the war ended, Sister Aquinas was off to Notre Dame to earn a degree in electronics. She is a firm believer that knowing as much as possible is necessary to be a good teacher.

Since coming to Green Bay's Catholic educational system, Sister Aquinas has been on the go, showing other teachers her workshop methods.

Her fame has caught on, the story of her life is the subject of a book, film and television play.

Her latest project is starting a college at Manitowoc, Wis., which will specialize in training teachers in her workshop methods. Sister Aquinas wants this school to be training ground for teachers from all over the world.

"Education through motivation is the only answer to juvenile problems," she said. "We must interest youth, we must find a way to keep them busy with the things they like to do, and will do for a life work."

Blue Daisy Sale Set This Week

Medford chapter, Blue Star Mothers of America, will hold the annual Blue Daisy sale on the streets of Medford Friday and Saturday, May 17 and 18. The Blue Daisy is the emblem of the organization and the only means of raising funds used by the chapter.

Mrs. Rex Note, sale chairman, states that proceeds of the sale are used solely in hospital recreational games for the wheel chair patients at Camp White. "The men are often our forgotten veterans, as there are some who seldom get outside of the domiciliary," Mrs. Note states.

Mrs. Note added that the response of the public in previous years has been fine, and the committee hopes the sale will be well received this year. Headquarters will be at Zilka Smith and company on Central avenue.

Charter Banquet To Be Saturday In Eagle Point

Gymkhana, Show Set for Sunday

There will be no charge for spectators, and the public is invited to attend.

A refreshment stand will open at 10 a.m. and food and beverages will be sold all day. This will be the second of a series of shows to be given this summer by the valley's five riding clubs. The first show was sponsored by the Junior posse. During the series, competition among the participants will be judged on points, with trophies being awarded to the two clubs with the highest point standing.
