Scalloped and fringed trimming of shade repeats the attractive cornice treatment at top of window.

BY RUTH W. LEE, HOME-FURNISHINGS CONSULTANT

WHEN is a window shade more than a window shade? When it has color, design, texture, or trim to make it an important part of a room's décor. And that's just what's happening to current styles. Washable shades now match walls and draperies, with fringes and borders creating additional interest. There are even smart tweeds especially suited to contemporary settings. Modes of installation are changing, too. To provide privacy as well as light control, some shades draw up from the sill. With such major improvements in fashion and function, these "window dressings" make more than a shade of difference in today's well-appointed interiors.

In a modern living room, handsome textured tweed shades and matching ceiling-to-floor draperies contribute to artful decoration.

"Upside-down shades" draw upward to control light, insure privacy, and still allow for a view of trees and shrubs outside window.
