The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

The Mental Health Campaign

During May devoted people are going to go from door to door asking for contributions to the National Association for Mental Health. This is made up of more than 500 state and local mental health associations throughout the country. It is a non-profit organization of laymen and it has the approval of the National Institute of Mental Health, and The American Psychiatric Association.

Many of our mental hospitals are ancient and they are housing twice as many patients as they were built for. In some places the few doctors in the institution have no time for more treatment of the patients' mental disturbances. With only low salaries to offer, it is hard for the superintendent to find good attendants. No research can be carried out.

The money that the Mental Health Association is now asking for will be used to help mental patients before they go into a hospital, while they are there, and after they come out. It will support research projects; it will establish clinics for the thousands of disturbed persons who cannot afford to go to a psychiatrist; it will train personnel for mental hospital, and it will support the campaign to get better mental hospitals built. It will help in educating the public in the prevention of mental illness.

Exploratory Operations

People ask me why they should submit to an exploratory operation. They say the very term frightens them. Any good doctor will admit that at times such an operation is unwise and perhaps avoidable. A better diagnostic examination might have shown that it wasn't necessary, or a wise old consultant might quickly have made the diagnosis without it. For instance, I have seen many a woman whose abdomen was examined by x-rays and found to be functioning normally, but still the woman's doctors were uneasy about her. They operated, thinking that they would probably find some local disease to account for her pain, but they found none. If the woman had known enough to emphasize the fact that for years she had had migrainous sick headaches, and if the doctors had been taught in college that women with a strong tendency to migraine sometimes have pain in the gallbladder region, for which no local cause can ever be found, the woman would not have had to be operated on.

Able professors of surgery are now trying to teach their graduate students not to cling to the old idea that when a patient has some abdominal distress, an operation will usually find something radically wrong that can be removed. In hundreds of thousands of cases, a discomfort or pain in the abdomen is due purely to some sort of a nervous storm that is coming down from the brain, or to the eating of some food to which the person is allergically sensitive, or to getting constipated, or to getting a sick headache, or to getting either arthritis in the spine, or a related irritation of the nerves leaving the spine, or a fibrositis in the muscles and so-called fascias (bands of fibrous tissue) in the abdominal wall.

Operation Justified

There is one type of case in which I think an exploratory operation is often justified and
