

The new Youth council of Medford YMCA has announced that it will work to keep the special program for young people operating throughout this summer. They will plan dances, picnics and other activities for all interested teenagers. The young people will be aided by Herb Partridge, new youth work director, who is to arrive here from Spokane June 15. Members of the new council are (left right) Miss Joyce Giliinsky, treasurer; Miss Karen Stansbury, secretary; Walter

Humphrey, president; John Ramsay, sergeant-at-arms; Miss Sylvia Baker, vice president. The new president stated "We hope to set up a program which will deserve the support of parents, youth and the community. For those who would like to take part in the summer program, a basic membership in the 'Y' is necessary. Adults can help by taking memberships, since financial support is needed."

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Mrs. R. T.—Jane is too domineering.
Jane T.—I am trying to help my mother.

Mrs. R.T.—We are having a lot of trouble with our oldest daughter, 15-year-old Jane. She is so domineering, it is almost impossible to live with her.

Jane wants to boss the three younger children and me as well. She'll have nothing at all to do with her father. She is constantly rude to him and won't even let him sign her report card because she says it's "none of his business." My husband is the gentlest man alive and has done nothing to make Jane feel this way about him.

We feel that Jane is very unhappy for reasons we simply can't understand. She does not date yet, but she has many girl friends and is doing well in school. She says she can't wait until she is old enough to go to work and is free of all of us.

Jane T.—My mother always defends my father, but he is rotten to her. He never takes her out or buys her clothes. He never helps her around the house and she has to do all her own work.

My mother can't seem to understand that I am trying to help her. My father has a weak character and never trained any of us to help our mother or to take care of our own things. When I try to make my sisters and brother do things, everyone yells that I am being a dictator.

Sure I'm unhappy. How could anybody be happy in a home like mine? My mother has to work all the time, and my father and sisters and brother just enjoy themselves. My parents don't really love one another at all, but just stick together because of us. We would be better off if they got a divorce.

The Council: Jane's picture of her family life is evidently a false one since her mother sees none of the issues that Jane raises. In fact, Mrs. R. T.'s only problem appears to be Jane.

It eliminates her father and to establish herself as head of the household. The parents should try to straighten out the picture in Jane's mind. They should let her know they do love one another and have no thought of divorce.

Mrs. R. T. should give Jane no encouragement in the idea that she is being exploited. She should let Jane know that she loves her work as a wife and mother and invite the girl to join her in some of her feminine tasks.

Mr. R. T. should insist upon exercising his authority as head of the household, including the signing of Jane's report card.

Beyond this, Jane should be encouraged to release some of her turbulent energy outside of the home—in school and in extra-curricular activities. This may help her to get through this difficult adolescent phase.

However, there are some rather deep-rooted reasons for Jane's attitude toward her parents and, if the conflict in the home continues for too long, it might be advisable to see whether a family agency consultant would suggest some psychiatric help.

We should make education opportunities available for every young person, doing all we can to improve standards of teaching and physical facilities."
