Latest drowning victims were Louis Looney, 15, Eugene, and Wayne Clark, 13, Port Orford.

Young Looney drowned Sunday afternoon in Big Fall creek about 25 miles southeast of Springfield. He was walking along the water's edge with two other boys when he slipped and fell into the creek. A companion, Delmar Patrick, attempted to rescue him but was unable to do so before the boy went under.

A Sunday night traffic smash near Monitor took the life of Olaf Bennett Moen, 51, Woodburn. His wife was hospitalized at Silverton for shock. The driver of the other car, Leon J. Schieder, Mt. Angel, was not hurt.

A rash of traffic accidents took several lives Saturday.

5 People Charged With Burglary

Five people were lodged in the county jail on charges of burglary Saturday night as a result of "routine checking" of automobiles by state police.

Samuel Ivan Thompson, 21, Klamath Falls, student at Southern Oregon college, was arrested in connection with a burglary Saturday at Ernie's Cycle shop, Phoenix. The vehicle Thompson was driving was stopped by police on Highway 99 at Talent. Officers said the car contained several items believed taken from the cycle shop.

French Take-Off on Striptease Said Gaining

Paris—The French take-off on the American striptease is bumping along the road to success in Gay Paree.

The secret of burlesque with the French touch, according to the French, is more strip and less tease.

The experts also claim that the accent here is as much on pretty faces as on dangerous curves. The French say their strippers are younger, prettier, and more petite than the American brand.

Les artistes as they are known here, don't dawdle through a poky version of "Tea for two," undressing ruffle by ruffle and snap by snap, and finally emerging in a g-string and flimsy bra, as American strippers do.

The French girls go into their acts with more zest. They unzip already brief costumes to swing rhythms. Then they pose or dance wearing only a single triangular patch—a g-string with no strings attached—for five or 10 minutes.

Scores of girls are employed in Paris night clubs ranging from the swank to the existentialist. The "cave" in which existentialist philosopher Jean-Paul Sartre used to mope, has been taken over by girls who get paid to undress in public.

Shows featuring strippers include high-priced theatrical productions as well as weekly amateur disrobing night at the Moulin Rouge club. At the Moulin Rouge, girls selected from the audience peel off their date dresses and underthings to roars of laughter from the audience.

For girls who want to learn more, there is a striptease school which teaches them the bare facts of the profession.

A pretty blonde stripped with what once were known as goo-goo eyes takes a sudsy bath right on the stage at the crazy Horse saloon every night. A Left bank bistro beauty strips to funeral music, weeping the while.

The girls who get paid for this activity come from almost every country. One, a Scottish lass, had the thrill of her life when her parents came to Paris to watch her strip. They in turn also were thrilled, when they found out how much money she makes—more than 100 dollars a week.

Le striptease, as it is called here, became a two-million-dollar industry last year, drawing more Europeans than Americans and more Frenchmen than foreign visitors. This year it is expected to bring further prosperity to the French night club circuit.

one club. They appear for about $7.50 a strip in each of the several places on their nightly circuits. Some make as much as 600 dollars a month.

Alain Bernardin, operator of the Crazy Horse, downstairs from Balenciaga's ritzy dress-making parlor and across the street from the expensive Hotel George V, claims he introduced le striptease to Paris in 1951, to perk up the night club business.

Safe Stolen From Tavern at Ontario

Ontario—Thieves broke into the Plaza Tavern here sometime overnight and carted off a heavy safe, police reported today.

Charles Retzell, tavern owner, said the safe contained between $3,500 and $4,000, of which $1,000 was in cash and the balance in paychecks.

The thieves bored through the back door to gain entrance, and used a small beer truck to cart the safe to their escape vehicle.

Police said from the nature of the job, it was probably executed by the same thieves who broke into the Payette Food Center in Payette, Idaho, Saturday night. The Payette job netted $1,618 in cash and a valuable coin collection.

New Italian Premier's Cabinet Appears Doomed

Rome—A "revolt" within his own Christian Democrat party appears to have doomed Premier Adone Zoli's cabinet, if it survives its first parliamentary test.

Zoli is expected to win the vote with the support of the right wing Monarchists and Fascists. But leading members of the Christian Democrats urged him to resign and force new elections rather than depend on the right wing support.
