The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

Menopause

A woman writes to say that she is having such a terrible time with the menopause that she is thinking of doing away with herself.

She says she never was a worrier and never thought she had a nerve in her body, but now for 19 months she has been a nervous wreck, often jittery with associated pains all over, bad flushes, occasionally a rapid heart-beat, terrible sweats, and many fears and foolish worries. She jumps up in the night and finds herself in the middle of the room, wondering how she got there.

She says her physicians haven't been able to help her, and I wonder why. Usually, the flushes and a lot of the nervous symptoms can be made much milder by the taking each day of a little pill containing an ovarian extract, obtained either from the ovaries of animals or from a chemical laboratory. Experts tell me that these extracts work more evenly if taken by mouth and not injected. Not enough should ever be taken to make the woman's breasts sore or to make her menstruate again. She must not let anyone frighten her by saying the medicine can produce cancer. Experts no longer fear this.

If medicine doesn't do well enough, and the person is badly depressed and suicidal, she had better see a sensible and kindly psychiatrist. With a few electroshock treatments she may snap out of her melancholia.

Living at a High Altitude

Many persons are afraid of living at a high altitude, let us say, 5,000 feet. Actually, I doubt if many persons are influenced by such an altitude. In South America there are persons who live at altitudes of 15,000 feet, and most of them get along all right. The number of red corpuscles in their blood increases so as to compensate for the small amount of oxygen in the air. Occasionally, a person who perhaps has a poor heart to begin with, or whose body cannot compensate well, gets short of breath, and has to go down to a lower altitude.

A person can quickly tell if the altitude is bothering him; if it is, he is likely to get short of breath or a bit asthmatic and wheezy. No one is likely to do this who at sea level can walk fast without discomfort.

Local Man Triggers Nuclear Explosion

A Medford High school graduate, Roger J. Pederson, triggered the May 28 nuclear explosion near Las Vegas, Nev., according to word received here.

Pederson, an employee of Edgerton, Germeshausen and Grier, was graduated from the University following his high school graduation in 1945 and 18 months army service.

He triggered the explosion at 4:55 a.m. under supervision of employers, a Las Vegas newspaper reports.

Pederson's grandmother, Mrs. L. E. Larimer, resides at 915 Dakota Ave. He and his wife and three children reside in Las Vegas. His mother also recently moved there.
