Medical Research Saves Pets

In every state thousands of people spend much energy and money trying to put a stop to all medical research. They the dead dogs, and he would pay well for them, but the local "animal-lovers" saw to it that he was not permitted to buy them! If that wasn't stupid spite, I do not know it when I see it.

hate physicians and medicine with a deadly hate, and one of their ways of striking at the medical profession is by trying always to close up all the research laboratories by halting research on animals. Many strike at medicine, also, by fighting bitterly all public health measures, such as vaccination for smallpox or polio. In their blind hate many strike even at ordinances for the vaccination of pet dogs against rabies.

These people use as animal lovers, but curiously, I never heard of the doing anything to help animals. They try to close even the research laboratories in which devoted men and women are constantly searching for ways of protecting dogs and cats and farm animals from fatal diseases.

I was just reading in the Bulletin for Medical Research an article on the terrible disease of the bone marrow that used to kill thousands of pet cats. In the Fall of 1937, Drs. John F. Enders and William Hammon, of Harvard, were stopped from carrying out some research because the kittens they were using as test animals were all dying. After much work, the doctors found that the disease was due to a virus; and then, after more study, they produced a vaccine which protected the animals. This is now used by veterinarians to protect your cat when you take it to an animal clinic or hospital. Dr. Enders went on with this type of research, and in 1954 he, with Dr. Thomas Weller and Dr. Frederick Robbins, received the Nobel Prize in Medicine. It was their success in growing the polio viruses that made possible the development of the Salk vaccine, which is now saving the lives of so many children.

Law Permits Buying Animals

The other day I saw that Massachusetts has joined the more civilized states of the Union and has passed a law to permit a great university like Harvard to buy unclaimed stray animals from pounds. Now, of course, the many people who care nothing about what happens to sick children or adults, and who like each year to kill some 300,000 cats and dogs to no purpose, say they will hold up the law in the courts if they can. What is sad is that thousands of you good people who will read this will send in the money that will enable these people to fight the men who are searching for cures for cancer and other serious diseases. If these people who fight the research workers really cared a hoot about animals and their comfort, they would help the meat packers to put in the new and humane method of slaughtering animals, and they would give money to universities to help build larger and more comfortable cages and larger runways for the experimental animals. For some of you who read this, and doubt my statement that these people's motivation is almost purely hatred of medicine and public health, and not love of animals, I will say that years ago, when my good friend, Professor Herbert Evans, of the University of California, and his group were doing their wonderful work on the pituitary gland, they tried to buy the heads of the thousands of dogs that were being killed each year at the local pound and then sold to a fertilizer company. All Dr.
