Arctic Inspection Declared 'Comical'

Helsinki, Finland — (AP) — Soviet Party Chief Nikita S. Khrushchev said today the idea of an Arctic open skies inspection zone sounded "quite comical."

It is "quite comical to think of an inspection zone in an area of ice and snow," Khrushchev told a final day press conference here.

He did not elaborate except to say that the idea of inspection zones had not met with approval in the West after Russia had proposed a Far East-Alaska-Western U.S. zone at the London disarmament talks.

The proposal was an outgrowth of President Eisenhower's original "open skies" plan for aerial reconnaissance to detect any buildup for attack by East or West.

Boys Questioned in Connection With Fire

The origin of a small grass fire Wednesday behind the Rogue Equipment Sales company, 2920 North Pacific highway, has been determined with the interrogation of three Medford boys, aged 8, 7 and 5, according to city police.

According to police records, the boys said the fire started while they were playing with matches in a field behind the store. They told police they ran home when the fire got out of control. The juveniles were released to their parents.

The fire, which burned about a half an acre, was extinguished by city firemen. One pumper was dispatched to the fire.

Laboratory To Seek Answers to Questions

Cambridge, Mass. —(AP)— Can weather be modified on a large scale?

What is the interior of the earth really like?

Why do continents and the oceans exist, and why are they distributed as they are?

Answers to questions such as these will be sought in a laboratory of earth sciences established at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The laboratory will be under the direction of Prof. Henry G. Houghton, head of MIT's department of meteorology. It will try a new and integrated approach to experimental and theoretical investigations of man's environment: The atmosphere, the oceans, and the land masses between, including the interior of the earth.
