Most Effective Flood Control on Rogue Would Be Lewis Creek Dam

The most effective flood control program for the Rogue valley would be a high dam at Lewis creek, the Rogue Basin Flood Control and Water Resources was told here Monday night at the Josephine county courthouse.

Ross Hatch, directing a Rogue Valley flood control study for the Army corps of engineers, noted that the plan originally proposed by the bureau of reclamation, or a possible alternative of three dams at major tributaries on the upper Rogue, would offer the best flood control protection.

Opposition to the high dam, known as Plan A, was expressed in a letter from the Jackson county chapter of the Izaak Walton league. It stated the chapter would be "unalterably opposed" to a high dam at Lewis creek, even if recommended by the Army engineers as the only logical means of flood control.

Not Only Solution

"The Lewis creek dam is not the only solution being considered by the Army," Hatch said. But he added that such a high dam would mean "just that much less water to come downstream" when flood conditions again develop.

According to Hatch if protection was provided only for the small floods that occur in five or 10 year cycles, people would return to the danger areas.

Urban and suburban areas would not be benefited if only small floods were eliminated, leaving these areas still vulnerable to the "disastrous" floods appearing in 50-year cycles, said Hatch.

The Army engineer reminded association directors that the project must be viewed primarily from the flood control standpoint, indicating that power and irrigation aspects of the project would get secondary consideration.

Hatch and his assistant, K. D. Kerr, both from Portland office, outlined two "fundamental" principles which will guide the corps of engineers in all aspects of the Rogue study.

Benefits Exceed Cost

First, benefits must exceed cost of these projects, Hatch said. Second, if surveys indicate either of the two proposed projects will be feasible, engineers must recommend the one with lesser cost.

Hatch declared that a series of low dams, along tributaries of the Rogue, would not be feasible from the flood control standpoint, because the rapid fall of these streams preclude adequate water storage areas.

Army engineers will devise the "best apparent plan," but that if people of this area do not want it, "we will not build it," Hatch said.

He told the directors the association must prepare to work energetically on behalf of any project finally approved and recommended to congress. Congress will ignore the report unless there is organized support for the program, he said.

Money for Survey

State Rep. Ray Bristol. Grants Pass, noted that the Oregon Water Resources board had been appropriated $20,000 during the legislature's recent session for a comprehensive survey of the Rogue river and all possible water utilization from the stream.

The state board is expected to work closely with Army engineers in its survey, but will have veto power over any program recommended by the Army, Bristol said.

"But if the board approves the Army engineers' report, this will be a guarantee there will be no state opposition to the flood control plan," according to Bristol.

Later, members of the group authorized William Jess, association president, to write Rep. Charles O. Porter, (D-Ore.), of the fourth district, thanking him for his interest in the project. Porter announced he has plans to introduce a bill which would embody most of the original Plan A.

The Oregon congressman has indicated he will amend his bill to include the full program as recommended by Army engineers, when their survey has been completed.

Hatch pointed out any bill

Driver's License Of Wrong Variety; Judge Levies Fine

Houston, Tex.—It cost George Willis, 24, a Negro, $85 when he handed his driver's license to Traffic Judge Wallace P. Kelley. Willis was charged with driving without one.

The worn piece of paper he handed Kelley read:

"This is to certify that the person herein named has passed all tests for nervousness and has been licensed to operate a motor vehicle. The operator of the car. Back seat drivers must carry this license on person or otherwise must keep quiet while vehicle is in motion."

Willis, who can't read, said he got his license in a barber-shop.

Portland Woman on Stand in Fraud Trial

Portland — A Portland clubwoman took the witness stand in her own defense here Wednesday in the trial of a mail fraud conspiracy against the U. S. government.

The government charges that promoters of the Mount Hood Hardboard and Plywood Co-operative had milked the organization of between $250,000 to $350,000.

Mrs. Helen A. Davenport, 77, took the witness stand before U. S. Judge Gus Solomon. She was preceded on the witness stand by Circuit Judge Charles W. Crawford and Municipal Judge J. J. Quillin, who testified to her high reputation in the community.

Other action in today's court proceedings saw Judge Solomon dismiss the case against Richard Williams, 60, retired Milwaukee state police lieutenant, because, "we don't want to endanger anybody's life."

Williams became ill on the witness stand yesterday while testifying in his own defense. Williams has had three coronary occlusions before.

Plane's Prop Wash Fatal To Paratrooper

Ft. Bragg, N.C. — A medical investigation board has ruled that a young paratrooper who dangled helplessly for three hours outside a flying troop carrier plane was "drowned" in the plane's prop wash.

The board of Army and Air Force doctors said that Pfc. Wayne H. Flugum, 23, of Leland, Iowa, suffocated when he was unable to breathe because of the motion of the flowing air.

Flugum remained conscious for more than an hour and a half but died when crewmen of the C123 troop carrier were unable to pull him back into the plane.

Another board of investigation is seeking to determine how Flugum became tangled in dangling static lines as he and 35 other paratroopers leaped from the plane Tuesday over Ft. Bragg.

The board of Army and Air Force doctors said that Pfc. Wayne H. Flugum, 23, of Leland, Iowa, suffocated when he was unable to breathe because of the motion of the flowing air.

Godfrey's Property Yields Stolen Bonds

Miami Beach — Arthur Godfrey's oceanfront property has yielded a $100,000 "hidden treasure" of stolen bonds and jewelry which police said two convicts had buried in the sand.

Detectives using a rough map drawn by the convicts now confined in Mobile, Ala., on robbery convictions led detectives Wednesday to three strong boxes buried together in a shallow hole covered with sand.

Officers said Godfrey knew nothing about the cache on his property.

Police said the bonds, $75,825 in non-negotiable war savings certificates and upwards of $25,000 in transferable utility stocks, were buried 200 yards north of the Kenilworth Hotel, owned by the television star.

Rebels Ambush Bus In Western Algeria

Algiers — Rebels ambushed a bus in Western Algeria Wednesday and killed the only two European passengers aboard, French authorities announced today.

The bus was halted by a band of 15 Algerian nationalists while on a regular run from Tlemcen to Eugene-Etienne. Tlemcen is about 30 miles from the Moroccan border and was the scene of a major rebel attack last week.

In other parts of the territory, French troops killed 35 rebels in separate skirmishes. In the biggest clash, 19 rebels died in a French ambush north of Perre-gaux, 30 miles east of Oran.

Algiers, where six persons died in violent anti-Moslem rioting Tuesday, was calm.
