All in a Day's Work

BY JACK RYAN

Licensed beggars in Toronto, Ont., are being investigated after police found one making $40 a day and commuting to work by taxi from his suburban home.

A salesman, finding he was $3 short on his $5 fine for public drunkenness in Norfolk, Va., promptly made up the shortage by selling his shoes to another prisoner and walking to freedom barefoot.

A spectator at a steeplechase in Vennford, England, after calming a horse which had thrown its rider and jumped into the grandstand, mounted the steed and came in second, paying $29.40.

Newsmen in Vienna, Austria, scored a scoop when they teletyped this message: "Our building is burning from cellar to ceiling. We have to leave. End of story."

An Army recruiting sergeant who shared a Hagerstown, Md., office with an Air Force recruiter, was so impressed with the latter's sales pitch that he joined the Air Force himself.

A detective in Joplin, Mo., investigating a reported prowler in a church, took a step in the darkened basement and found himself floating in the baptismal tank.

A former Albuquerque, N. M., wrestler known as "Gorilla" has been hired by the Internal Revenue Bureau. His job: to collect delinquent accounts.

Meter readers in South Carolina, equipped with rock candy to pacify unfriendly dogs, found it was most effective when thrown hard at the belligerent canines.

A Marine recruiter in Oklahoma City, impressed by a letter from a prospect, drove 85 miles to meet him and found himself face-to-face with a 9-year-old boy.

The manager of a 1,700-family housing development in St. Louis quit his job because dunning tenants for the rent upset his stomach.

"... Now let's try it with a baseball!"
