Reamer Keller

Nobody seems happy about youth. "The best thing about it," wrote a disgruntled high-school girl, "is that it won't last." And somebody else remarked, "Adolescence is a period in which character is developed—the parents' character, that is." But Reamer Keller knows both sides are being facetious, and in these cartoons he sketches a warmer picture of this wonderful, whimsical age.

"My father insists I wear lipstick. He says it's the only way people will know I'm a girl."

"Want to hear a good one on Betty? Two days after she stole Tom from me he was drafted!"

"We belonged to each other forever—all last month."

"Hey, I can walk right into the bathroom! Is Jane sick?"

"Sorry, no more dates, Edwin. My diary is too dull now!"

"You said I should make myself comfortable."
