

Neuberger Tells Views For Students During Education Convention

By OLIVE STARCHER
Mail Tribune Staff Writer
Philadelphia, July 5.—"If the President had put as much zeal and fervor behind the bill for federal aid for school construction as he did working for legislation which favored the Idaho Power company, the education bill would have passed," Sen. Richard L. Neuberger of Oregon said here last night.

The Oregon senator was interviewed by a panel of college students during the "Notables Dinner" given by Student National Education association as part of the centennial convention of NEA.

On the panel of six students was Jim McDonald, Medford, newly elected president of SNEA. Senator Neuberger further said in answer to questions that

High Inventory of Polio Shots on Hand

Washington —P— The Public Health service has reported that the nation had 10,300,000 shots of Salk vaccine on hand in the week ended June 28.

The agency said this was the highest inventory level for polio vaccine since it began issuing weekly reports last April. But the service said there was no new vaccine ready for release to druggists, doctors and health officers last week end.

American education is better than ever; that Americans spend too little rather than too much on education. The senator also declared that too many Americans are indifferent to the affairs of government in general, as well as those of education. He agreed with one student who wanted to know if this condition is true because "life is too good in the United States," adding "some people pay attention to government only in time of crises."

Asked by McDonald if he thought the condition "alarming" the senator said it was a cause of grave concern but said he had been encouraged over the large vote at the last general election. He said some politicians were at fault, too, by failing to encourage their constituents to participate in government. McDonald also questioned the senator about his reaction to "clean bombs." The senator said "Unless the Russians have a 'clean' bomb, it won't do us much good to develop them."

School Support

Asked about public support for the federal aid to schools bill, Senator Neuberger said there was plenty of public support for the bill and pointed out that many administration bills are passed with almost no public support, but do so because the administration actively pushes them. "The administration threw in the towel too easy," he declared. Senator Neuberger answered a question about further extension of GI education benefits by saying he supported it and pointed out that the Russians "have more students in college than does the United States." "This government can afford to sacrifice a little money to educate the ex-GI's" he added.

Civil Rights

On the civil rights question, Senator Neuberger said "every citizen should have the right to vote—if his state will not give him the right to vote, the U.S. should guarantee it." He praised the supreme court for recent controversial decisions, saying

"They made me proud to be an American," and added "the administration has been too tepid and pallid in support of the court; at least the supreme court stands firm for the rights of all Americans. We should uphold their decisions." He praised Chief Justice Earl Warren and said one of the best moves ever made by President Eisenhower was his appointment of Justice Warren.

Senator Neuberger's closing words were in reply to a last question by McDonald and were Thomas Jefferson's words: "They have rights who maintain them."

The motto of Student National Education association is "Teach Freedom."

Written for the United Press
Hollywood —P— As a former model, one of the most frequent questions asked of me is "What do you consider the most important factor in making a woman attractive?"

I bypass the obvious answers such as good grooming and poise, and place the emphasis on the least mentioned, and almost completely overlooked essential—the voice.

I contend the human voice can be as distinctive as fingerprints. It can, through proper development, be as effective as a new wardrobe in making a woman desirable.

Look at the industry I'm closest to—motion pictures. Voices Familiar

Check the list of names whose voices you can identify merely by listening to them speak a phrase or two—Lauren Bacall, Ethel Barrymore, Claudette Colbert, Mercedes McCambridge, Mary Martin and June Allyson.

The male side of the ledger is further proof of my contention. What woman hasn't thrilled to the tones of Clark Gable or admired the resonant voice of Ronald Colman? How about Marlon Brando and Jose Ferrer?

All of these stars know the importance of their voices to their careers and have made sure that they sound as good as they look.

Today's woman has not fully realized the importance of a good voice. She's more interested in a pear-shaped figure than a pear-shaped tone.

Inventory Suggested
A woman should take inventory of her voice the same way she would of her hair and grooming. She should listen to herself talk—and more often than not, she will be amazed at what she hears. If her voice sounds like the cross between the squeaking of a rusty hinge and a file rasping on tin, she should take time to correct this.

I think the telephone is the best example of proving the importance of the voice. How often have you heard a couple of prowling bachelors describe a lady merely by a phone conversation? I think the phrase they use is—"She sounds great!" This may be a little flip but I think it makes my point.

Parking Meter Money

Giving City Trouble

Springfield, Mass. —P— This city has $532,949 it's having trouble spending. The money represents parking meter profits over a period of years. By law the money can be spent only for off-street parking facilities. And so far the Off-Street-Parking Commission has been unable to develop a satisfactory plan for using the funds.
