Public Health Service Sees Definite Link Between Cigarettes and Cancer

Washington — The U.S. Public Health Service said today there is "increasing and consistent evidence" that "excessive" cigarette smoking is one of the factors which can cause lung cancer.

Surgeon General Leroy E. Burney said studies have "confirmed beyond a reasonable doubt that there is a high degree of statistical association between lung cancer and heavy prolonged cigarette smoking."

He issued the statement after the Public Health Service completed a review of the report of a study group on smoking and health, which found a "direct relationship between the incidence of lung cancer and the amount smoked."

It was the strongest statement the government has made to date on the subject.

Burney said copies, along with scientific findings, are being sent to state health officers and the American Medical Association together with the request that they consider distribution of copies to health officers, medical societies and other health groups.

The health service made no specific recommendations as to what the public should do in the light of its statement. A spokesman said "putting the facts before the public is as far as we can go at this time."

A spokesman for the U.S. tobacco industry said Burney's statement "adds nothing new to what has been known about the cause of lung cancer."

Dr. Clarence Cook Little, chairman of the scientific advisory board to the Tobacco Industry Research Committee, reiterated his group's stand that there is no "definitive" evidence to establish "a cause and effect explanation of the complex problem of lung cancer."

In its official position in 1954, the Public Health Service took a milder view, saying there was "some evidence of a statistical association between cigarette smoking and lung cancer."

Today's statement went much further, definitely labeling "excessive" cigarette smoking as a "causative" factor.

Two packs of cigarettes a day is considered "excessive," a spokesman said.

Diablo Test Shot Delayed 24 Hours

Las Vegas, Nev. — The Atomic Energy commission has postponed its much-delayed Diablo test shot for at least 24 hours for technical reasons.

The nominal nuclear blast in the summer series had been set for today. The AEC late Thursday rescheduled the shot to be fired atop a 500-foot tower tentatively for Thursday at 4:30 a.m. (PDT) and reported further delays were possible.

It was the Diablo shot that did not go off as scheduled June 28 because of a power failure. Five scientists risked death to disarm the dud.
