Mexico To Be Topic To Story Session

True stories of adventures in Mexico will be related by Leslie Horn at the Medford Public library's story hour Wednesday, July 17, at 2 p.m.

Horn recently travelled extensively in Mexico. Mexican music will be another feature of the program, which is designed to interest children of the fourth, fifth, and sixth grades especially.

The regular weekly story hours will be continued on July 24, when Norene French will tell the story, "How Pat Got Good Sense," and on July 31, with "The Snow Maiden," narrated by Natalie McDougall.

The Wednesday story hours are being provided during the month of July through the courtesy of Mrs. Hazel Ann Hunt and members of her summer class at Southern Oregon college in children's literature and the elementary school library.

The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

I recently had an interesting conversation with an able college professor who was telling me of the difficulties he and his wife are having trying to do the right thing as they bring up their two teenage boys who have been going with a set of boys and girls from well-to-do and socially prominent families. These youngsters, by the time they are 15, belong to high school fraternities and go to dances that start late and often end at 5 o'clock the following morning. The unfortunate professor has to drive the boys to the dance, and later he has to go and get them and bring them home. Other parents in their set are also distressed at this situation, but if they balk at being night chauffeurs they are accused of giving their boys an inferiority complex or ruining them socially!

Dr Alvarez

Although the professor's salary is small, he is considering putting in an extra telephone for the boys because, after school hours, they live on the phone and no one can call the house! As the professor said sadly, "In our set the children are running the families." I told him he ought to read "Parents on the run," by Marguerite and Willard Beecher (Julian Press); in it the theme is that today, what with the modern psychiatric teaching that children must be allowed to grow up as little stinkers without the slightest respect or consideration for others, the parents have abdicated, and have turned the running of the home over to the youngsters.

The great difficulty a sensible parent encounters when he tries to cope with the modern selfish behavior of his children is that he gets no help from the other harried parents in the community. His children can keep telling him that he is the only old fogey in the town. If only a large number of parents were to get together and agree that dances will start and end at reasonable hours, and that there will be no wearing of orchids and hundred-dollar dresses, something might be accomplished.

My hat is off to parents who still believe in teaching their children courtesy, good manners, respect for elders, and consideration for the comfort and rights of others.

Children Can Agree on a Code of Behavior

I was much interested in reading about the experiment that has been tried in Palo Alto, Calif. According to the article, in the local high school the students themselves worked out and adopted a set of rules governing many phases of their lives. They agreed they would come home at certain hours; at school they would wear inexpensive clothes, and so on.

Their proposals were then submitted to their parents, who went over them carefully and made suggestions. Then the students agreed to abide by the rules.

I remember the comment of a young woman who lived in one of the dormitories of a denominational college and had to be in by a certain time each night. When asked if she didn't resent these restrictions, she said, "Why, no; we all have to abide by these rules; everyone does it so nobody minds."

Many a young girl resents the fact that, after a dance, her father calls for her to see her home, but in Palo Alto, it is one of the things written into their rules of conduct—that it is right for fathers to call for their young daughters—and so it is accepted and, again, "nobody minds because everyone does it."

This seems to me to be one of the most wise and wholesome solutions of many of the present-day troubles between parents and children; I wish more schools would try it.

At Times Doctors Need Help From Laymen

The other day at a luncheon where I spoke to a large group of fine women on the need for more and better research in phychiatry, my good friend, Dr. Frederick Gibbs, of the Brain Research Foundation, said something that impressed me much. He said that when we doctors want to get good research going in the field of cancer, polio, heart disease, tuberculosis, multiple sclerosis or any other disease, we seldom get far until we get a few thousand or millions of you good lay people stirred up and interested and willing to help us. Only when you lay people take hold and start raising money and stirring up interest, do things start moving on a big scale. Then many research workers can be put to work, and soon they begin to give us helpful ideas and good drugs with which to treat the disease that has been distressing us.

And so it is that in this column, from time to time, I will be calling attention to the great need that still exists for research in many fields of medicine.

Dr. Alvarez hopes his readers will understand that it would be impossible for him to answer requests for information or to attempt to diagnose by mail.

Garbage Dispensing Method Successful

Chatham, Ont. —(AP)— Charlie Dobson has discovered that application of the theory that everyone has a streak of larceny helps him get rid of his garbage.

The 76-year-old man lives in a neat cottage on the outskirts of this city just beyond the Chatham's garbage collection area. He fills a small box daily with his garbage of table scraps and old cans, wraps it attractively and places it on the shoulder of the highway in front of his dwelling.

"I've seen many a car stop, pick up the box and high - tail it down the road and I haven't had a box returned yet," he chuckled.
