Christianity Can Become Too Popular Says Magazine Editor

Editor's Note: Author of this week's religious column is editor of the Episcopal Church's Magazine and has recently been chosen to be dean of St. John's Cathedral in Denver. He raises the question whether Christianity can get too popular and what church members should do to relate their beliefs to the real problems of the modern world.

By DR. WILLIAM S. LEA
Written For The United Press

Thoughtful Christians all over the world are concerned about the relevance of the Christian gospel as it is being proclaimed today to the real problems of the modern world.

At times the leaders seem uncertain and confused about both the general strategy of the church and the practical means by which the Christian work is to move forward. This has started many groups throughout the country to thinking about and to discussing the church's fundamental purpose. This would seem simple enough: Namely, to glorify God, to win the lost, and to sanctify the faithful. But for most people today such expressions are mere words. It becomes increasingly clear that no new verbalisms can meet the deep-felt need for a new and more relevant approach.

Christians are concerned about the church's task despite what is obviously a kind of religious revival in America. Church membership, church attendance, and church building have reached new highs.

Recalls History
The more sensitive leaders point out, however, that some of the saddest chapters in church history were written when Christianity was extremely popular and "religious" enthusiasm ran very high. They remind us of the days of religious persecutions or the sorry times which followed the establishment of Christianity as the official religion of the Roman Empire. They warn us of the real dangers which could follow if Christianity gets too "popular" today.

It is against such a background, and out of this concern, that the really dedicated church leaders are considering the problem of contemporary Christian strategy. There have been few clearly defined answers yet and no universally accepted principles, but there are, nevertheless, many hopeful signs.

Underneath the surface, not yet widely understood or accepted, is an emerging pattern which can be dimly discerned. A new and more vital set of basic principles could emerge which might spark one of the most significant advances in the church's long story of struggle, triumph and disappointment.

Suggests Seven Steps
We suggest that there are seven steps which are necessary if this new program is to be effective and relevant to the real world in which men live today. There is nothing really new or startling about them. They may seem obvious. It is the obvious, however, which we too often miss. Here are the steps in the development of this new strategy for the Christian church:

—The Gospel must be acted out and not just proclaimed. The Abbe Micheneau has said that "the parish church must be the show window of God's love." This means, in ordinary terms, that we must demonstrate our product if we ever expect to market it. We have to "transfer our religion from our mouths to our muscles."

—Evangelism and the church's mission begin at home. But it doesn't end there. Our emphasis must be first intensive, and then extensive. It is really easier to take the Gospel to the "heathen" in far away places than to the disillusioned friends at home who may have been inoculated with so many small doses of "Christianity" that they are immune to the real thing.

—Every layman must also be a Christian minister. This is more than the "priesthood of all believers." It grows out of the fact that the church is commissioned to continue the whole ministry of Christ. In this sense, the church is "the extension of the incarnation."

Gospel For Society
—The Christian Gospel is not just for individuals but for society and culture as well. The center of interest varies from age to age. The dominating concern of our day is the problem of human relationships — between individuals, classes, races and nations.

—The need to recognize the principle of contagion. "Christianity is more often caught than taught." This means that we do not often win converts by argument. Perhaps the process of conversion can best be started in small groups, in "cells" if you like.

—As Archbishop Temple has reminded us, God is not interested in "religion." The word "religion" is not a Biblical word at all. Jesus talked about God-centered living, not about "religion." This word "religion" too often means the compartmentalization of life.

—The need to proclaim the principle of redemption. The Christian Gospel is aimed at the redemption of the whole creation, "a new heaven and a new earth," and a great society of new men in Christ. This means far more than just extricating individuals out of this chaotic and sinful world.

Christian evangelism can be defined only in these grand terms. It is a cosmic enterprise.

Billy Graham Crusade Leader in Spot News

New York — Billy Graham has edged out King Saud as leader in the spot news field, aside from President Eisenhower.

Readers spotted 31,823 stories during the first four weeks of the evangelist's New York "crusade," according to a clipping bureau (Luce). The next highest total for a similar period was 30,543 news items gathered on King Saud's visit to the United States last February.

The Graham news avalanche represents more than 1,000 press clippings a day. This, in turn, means about 60 per cent of the nation's daily newspapers averaged at least one published news story a day on the evangelist.

Replica of Tomb Of Christ is Built

Covington, Ky. — The Rev. Morris Coers of the Immanuel Baptist church here is nearing realization of a dream born years ago in the Holy Land — to reconstruct in this country a replica of the sepulcher said to have been the tomb of Christ.

Work on the unusual project on Hatchett Hill, overlooking the Ohio river, began more than a year ago.

At this stage, a heavy crane is being used to lift 100-pound slabs of rock to form a wall on the hillside.

Below this wall, a narrow slit in the rock leads to a rough-hewn chamber, about 15 by 20 feet in size. On one wall is written in Hebrew, "He is the beginning and the end."

"This is a replica of the tomb of Christ," the minister said. "It was in just such a chamber that His body was placed on Good Friday. Every time I enter this sheltered place I get a feeling of awe."

The clergyman said that years ago, on his first pilgrimage to the Holy Land, he visited the tomb believed to be the one of Joseph of Arimathea gave for the body of Christ and resolved to duplicate it in America.

Tons of steel and concrete, as well as stone, have been used. Skilled workmen have given the concrete the appearance of weathered rock, duplicating the appearance of the tomb at Jerusalem.
