Army Honor Guard Also Protects Nation's Capitol

By VICTOR WARTOFSKY
 United Press Correspondent
 Washington — The Army command responsible for providing crack honor guards isn't all spit and polish. It's also charged with protecting the nation's capital.

Long thought of as the show-piece of the service, the military district of Washington's primary concern is the defense of the seat of government.

The MDW is an entity within itself and performs most of the functions of a regular Army command. Like other commands, it is prepared to furnish aid in event of flood or fire.

The capital's official guardian is also ready for any disturbance — from sabotage to riot control — working in close cooperation with Civil Defense agencies.

But its unusual responsibility lies in providing welcomes for distinguished visitors. The Army said planning for these events can be complicated and arduous.

The 1951 visit of Britain's Queen Elizabeth was a typical example. The completed plans, covering such measures as traffic control and security, comprised more than 75 pages of directives and charts.

In the field, drill teams practiced marching and the manual of arms for the ceremonies. And because spaced gun salutes lose their effectiveness when fired out of line, split-second timing was achieved after long hours of training.

The MDW's "Old Guard," or Third Infantry Regiment, actually does the furnishing of military escorts. It provides the traditional honor guard for the President in inaugural parades and state functions.

The Army said the MDW also does "housekeeping" chores for the Pentagon. Its unit there provides local security, supervises parking privileges and receives visitors.

Walter Reed Army hospital and the National War college are two world-famous Army installations under the jurisdiction of MDW. The War college, directed

Squabbling Skeltons Call Off World Trip

Rome — Red Skelton cut short a round the world trip Wednesday and decided to fly his family home as the result of a domestic squabble over a German-made bus.

The bus hassle was the latest of a series of rows between the TV comedian and his red-haired wife, Georgia, which had marred the trip they began to show the sights of the world to their leukemia-stricken son, Richard.

Richard himself was in good condition today. Although he had been bedridden for 48 hours by an upset stomach, a Roman specialist said his blood is "practically normal."

Washington — President Eisenhower played golf at Burning Tree Club Wednesday.
