The Medical Roundup

Persons Who Fear Heart Disease

The world is full of people who think they have heart disease, but who really haven't it.

Dr Alvarez

I am sorry to say we doctors are sometimes to blame for having been too pessimistic about a heart murmur or a little change in an electrocardiogram. It is encouraging to note that more and more of us physicians are learning now to disregard many of the slight abnormalities in the heart that used to alarm us.

Commonly, today, a man gets a slight coronary attack or what is thought to have been a coronary attack; he stays in bed for a few weeks; he has no more symptoms, and when he gets up he finds that he can walk around as comfortably as he ever did before. He may even be able to walk up two flights of stairs without getting any pain or any shortness of breath. To a good heart specialist this would mean that he was well, and that the little scar in his heart would not bother him any more. But perhaps his doctor is a pessimist who says, "Well, you had better go easy; never walk upstairs; move into a house with only one floor; don't smoke; don't eat meat; don't eat much fat; don't salt your food; don't drive your car, and don't make love to your wife." All this is enough to make a nervous wreck out of some men.

But even when the doctor says, "You are now perfectly well; you are cured; you don't have to worry any more; go about your business as you always have done; go ahead and play 18 holes of golf if you can do it comfortably; do anything you can do without getting pain or shortness of breath; eat what you like; smoke, and take a couple of drinks before dinner if you want to," the man may be so terribly worried that he goes around feeling his pulse; he lives in an agony of fear, and he doesn't dare go back to work.

I point out to all men like this that it may be that they have a little scar in their heart muscle, but it is so small that it is doing them about as much harm as would a scar in the end of their little finger. To all practical purposes they are hale and hearty, and they must quit fearing heart disease. They must stop going to the doctor all the time to get new electrocardiograms made; and they must stop behaving as if they were trying desperately to find something awfully wrong.

Leukemia

Many ask, "What is leukemia?" It is a cancer of the blood-forming organs which causes the blood to be filled with countless billions of abnormal types of white blood corpuscles. There are several kinds of leukemia with different grades of malignancy.

There is one rare type in which the disease does not advance, and the person can live for years. Then there are the chronic forms which often now are greatly helped or apparently cured by a radiation of some type. Often these people have an enormous spleen which feels like a tumor in the upper left quadrant of the abdomen. Treatment of this spleen with x-rays or other forms of radiation may bring a remission of symptoms. Sometimes this remission will last for several years or for so long that it looks as if a cure had been worked. Nowadays, surgeons are helping some patients by removing the big spleen.

The acute form of leukemia which occurs often in children is the most distressing of all. I have known children who were well and playing actively one day and were dead a few weeks later. Unfortunately, we have no good treatment for acute leukemia, but new drugs are constantly being found, and sometimes one of them will keep the child alive for quite a while. There is always the hope that a really curative drug will soon be found. At last, acute leukemia in mice can be cured.

Massachusetts Toll Road Eases Driving

Boston —(UP)— Massachusetts' newly opened East-West Toll Road was built at a cost of almost two million dollars per mile — a total of 239 million dollars.

In all 123 miles of the new highway there are no traffic lights. The old route had 77 sets of lights.

The few curves on the new road are gentle ones. On the old route, there were 203 curves.

On the turnpike, a truck driver can travel the 123 miles without shifting gears. On the old route, about 190 gear shifts were necessary.

On the old route, a driver applied his brakes an average of 62 times. On the new road no braking is necessary except in an emergency.
