

Molotov Was Symbol and Evil Genius of Unreasonable, Ruthless Russian Policy

For more than a decade Molotov was the symbol and the evil genius of the stubborn, unreasonable, ruthless Russian policy. Molotov used to work desperately to destroy any agreements that were made between Stalin, as the head of the Russian government, and the free governments of the world. I found that whenever I personally negotiated with Stalin, I had less trouble getting agreements with him. But Molotov would always intervene to see that these agreements were never kept.

On my very first meeting with Molotov, a few days after I became President, I pointed out to him that our difficulties with Russia were caused by Russia's failure to keep agreements. I bluntly told Molotov that peace was a two-way street and that since we always kept our agreements, we expected Russia to keep hers.

Serious Stumbling Block
Molotov complained that he had never been spoken to in such a manner by anyone before, and I said, "Keep your agreements, and you won't be talked to like that."

It was clear to me that Molotov was a serious stumbling block to any approach of good faith in our dealings with Russia. Experience showed that he never wanted any agreements. His role was to foster tensions and anxieties in the world.

Stalin, on the other hand, occasionally appeared to be more accommodating and amenable, and there were times I hoped that I could get along with him, and said so.

But Stalin, too, was of the same cynical school of political tyrants, and he also ran out on his agreements, while posing as a more flexible and peace-seeking statesman. Stalin used Molotov to cover up his own intentions, as every man in the Kremlin, even if he appears to be his own spokesman and inclined to be friendly, will always resort to devious means to maintain power and seek world domination. That, unfortunately, is the nature of the Soviet dictatorship. As long as there is dictatorship in Russia, no matter who rises to the top, we are bound to have misgivings about our dealings with them.

Can't Cease Trying
We must not, we cannot, cease trying to get some understanding. But let us see that those of us who are asked to surrender our advantages, as in the suggested reduction of armaments, are insured of security. I believe that eventually we will reach agreement on atomic and nuclear bombs, because these are so terribly dangerous and destructive that an agreement will force itself upon the world.

In 1945 I asked for a disarmament conference, and at that time I had in mind placing control of all armaments, including the atomic bomb, with a United Nations capable of maintaining peace through an international force if aggression broke out anywhere. If the Russians had not sabotaged this proposal, we would have had armaments control long ago.

First To Make Sacrifice
The United States has always been the first to suggest reductions of arms and was the first to make the greatest sacrifice in the interest of world peace. But, unfortunately, the sacrifice of the United States only encouraged imperialistic adventurers to take advantage of our militarily weakened position to embark upon campaigns of world conquest. If the United States had not disarmed when it did, the history of the world might have been different.

But as events unfolded, each reduction in armaments by the United States was followed by a succession of aggressions by Japan, Germany, Italy and, of late, the aggressive behavior of Communist Russia and Communist China.

It seems ironic to me that anyone would take seriously the Russian propaganda, given some prominence of late, that their system of government is based on idealism and that ours is based on materialism. The Russian rulers believe in the control of the individual by the government. That is just as plain as it can be. But our system of government is based on individual freedom, and the welfare of the people comes first. Our government is set up only for the purpose of carrying out the will of the people who have a right to change their government and the rules by which they are governed. We believe in the people. The Russian leaders fear them. They insist that the individual must be subordinate to the state. We hold that the government is the servant of the people and subordinate to them.

Despite what has happened of late in the ruling clique of Russia, they continue to have the effrontery to say that they know what is best for their people. But when they undertake to decide what is best for the Hungarian and Polish people and the people of other satellites, they become dangerous to mankind, and let us make sure that they do not intrude and tell us what is best for us to do.

Family Rescued After Plane Crash

Asheville, N. C.—An Ohio couple and their young daughter who spent nearly 24 hours on a rugged mountain side where their plane crashed were saved because "God gave us another chance," the father said Friday.

The three were being cared for in a hospital here mainly for shock and exposure.

Wloszek's plane crashed in a fog on Clingman's Peak Wednesday. The family was en route here from Cleveland to attend a convention.

Wloszek walked from the wreckage of the plane to a steep logging road after rescuers carried his wife and daughter out on stretchers. The little girl still held the teddy bear which she clutched all night.
