Fifty years old this week, the U. S. Air Force is the world's strongest; but there were times when it had trouble getting off the ground.

Typical men behind machines were Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker (above), World War I ace and first of great American pilots, and Brig. Gen. Billy Mitchell (below), early martyr in the struggle for air power, development of which is shown below.

Orville Wright delivers first military plane to Fort Myer, Va.

World War II "Flying Fortress," beloved high-altitude bomber.

World War I "flying coffin" used pilot, rear machine gunner.

Captain Yeager shatters sound barrier in X-1 rocket ship.

In '21 Mitchell proved prophecy by sinking "unsinkable" ship.

Supersonic "Starfighter" is Air Force's latest and fastest.
