

Seattle Attorney Top Candidate As Secretary's Aide for Minerals

By A. ROBERT SMITH
Mail Tribune Correspondent

Washington — Secretary of Interior Fred A. Seaton is looking for a new assistant secretary for minerals whose appointment will bring Seaton close to a complete change in the top posts at Interior since he succeeded Douglas McKay.

Currently being considered is George Kinnear, Seattle attorney who just completed a term as Republican state chairman for Washington state.

Seaton is looking especially for a man who has no mining interests or ties which might compromise or handicap him as a sub-cabinet official having jurisdiction over the nation's mining program. Kinnear is considered qualified on this and other grounds.

The effect of this consideration by Seaton is to obtain a man who would not have the background of McKay's choice for this office, Felix Wormser, who was assistant secretary for minerals until his recent resignation.

Effort Collapses

Wormser was vice president of St. Louis Lead Co. and shortly before his appointment was actively working here in Washington in behalf of raising tariffs on lead and zinc. The effort collapsed when President Eisenhower at that time opposed this idea during congressional consideration of the extension of the reciprocal trade act.

Just before Wormser left office, he finished drafting a new mining program which included higher tariff protection for the lead and zinc industries.

The program, bearing the administration's stamp of approval, many western senators and congressmen of both parties who are fearful that lead and zinc mines in the mountain states will close down unless given some government help or protection from foreign imports.

When McKay and Wormser was trying to find a new head of the Bureau of Mines in 1953, they picked Tom Lyon of Salt Lake City, who had to withdraw under critical fire when it was disclosed that he was drawing a $5,000 annual pension from Anaconda. It is now before Congress and has the support of conda Copper Co. Wormser at the time told Congress he hadn't realized Lyon was getting a pension from the big mining firm.

Appointee Must Be 'Clean'

Seaton is searching for Wormser's successor with what appears to be more care to see that his appointee will be "clean as a hound's tooth." Thus far he has been successful in finding new men for Interior's highest posts, and none of them has come under fire as some of McKay's selections did.

Seaton's new assistant secretary for fisheries, Ross Leffler, has won praise from the conservation groups that were so critical of many of the policies at Interior during McKay's term. The new assistant secretary for public lands, Roger Ernest, has had none of the troubles that complicated the life of Wesley D'Ewart, McKay's choice who had to resign when the Senate refused to confirm him. Clarence A. Davis is gone as undersecretary, replaced by Hatfield Chilson, who is making a favorable impression.

The only remaining controversial figure who remains from the McKay regime is Fred Aandahl, assistant secretary for water and power. There have been unconfirmed reports that Seaton has wanted to ditch Aandahl, but that the White House had not gone along with this. Aandahl strongly supports the original "partnership" power which embroiled him in many power controversies with public power groups.

Quotes From the News

By UNITED PRESS

Washington—Robert T. Secrest, acting chairman of the Federal Trade commission, speaking for himself and other tobacco chewers, on the decline in their ranks:

"I don't think anyone in the country cares a damn if we live or die: It's a lost art."

Springfield, Ill.—Stateville Warden Joseph Ragen, reporting the reaction of thrill killer Nathan Leopold to the refusal of the governor of Illinois to grant him a parole:

"He did not weep. There was no physical reaction when I gave him official word of the governor's action."

New York—Kumar Das Gupta, Indian student arriving in New York, irritated at newsmen's interest in the similarity between his name and that of the Indian woman romantically linked with Roberto Rossellini:

"No, no, no. I am no relation to her and I'm tired of being asked about the other Das Gupta."

Washington—Assistant Air Force Secretary David G. Smith, on the imminent possibility of combat planes flying 2,000 miles an hour at altitudes of 75,000 feet:

"The era of fantastic air vehicles is a real and growing part of our socio-economic complex."

Anderson, S.C.—Mrs. Lenore Beasley, mother of a 17-month-old girl trapped for more than four hours in a narrow well shaft:

"It doesn't seem like it happened—it's like a dream."

Washington—Deputy Attorney General William P. Rogers, urging a Senate judiciary committee on immigration to permit greater latitude in the granting of asylum to refugees from Communist persecution:

"We should make known to the world that this country does not fear the worthy alien who seeks to join with us in our ever continuing progress toward the establishment of freedom throughout the world."
