Little Strokes That Occur

During Sleep or During The Day

One of the common ways of growing old is through the action of a series of little strokes, some of which come unnoticed during sleep. During the early morning hours, when the blood pressure falls to its lowest level, the blood will sometimes clot in a tiny artery in the brain, especially if the lining of the artery has become roughened and thickened by disease. Then the small bit of brain, perhaps no bigger than the head of a pin, that was supplied by the little artery, dies and turns into a scar.

Sometimes these "little strokes" come during the day, and the person has a brief dizzy or woozy spell, perhaps with nausea and even vomiting. Occasionally after a little stroke in the night, the victim will wake with a "head on him" as if he had been drinking hard the night before. I remember a college president, a man who had always had a wonderful memory, who woke one morning with what he felt sure was "half of his memory gone." Another man woke feeling queer and, for the next three weeks, wondered why he kept biting his tongue. Obviously, the center for a nerve that controls the tongue had been injured. Another man, with a similar brain injury, for two months, had trouble swallowing food will keep going down the wrong way; causing him to cough distressingly at table. A few men woke with their sense of smell gone, and a few with a feeling of tremendous sensitivity all down one side of the body from their face to their foot. Many workers with numbness or clumsiness in one hand. I remember two who woke with great pain in a wrist. Many of the people who had their dizzy spell during the day wondered, at the time, if they were having a stroke. Fortunately, in most cases, the effects wore off within days or weeks or months.

A Changed Man

I have spent much of my life studying these little strokes. Sometimes a man will fall out of his chair, and in a moment pick himself up. He may think at the time that nothing much happened, but soon the family notices that he is a changed man—perhaps irritable, unreasonable, slowed-up, and unable to work well at the office. Occasionally I will see a person who for 20 minutes cannot talk; he can't find the right words. Perhaps an arm or leg will be weak for a few hours. Sometimes a pain will shoot into the chest or the abdomen.

I am always sure of a little stroke when the man's writing changes so much that the banks send for him to give them a new signature for his checks. Often he becomes a sore trial at home where he is unreasonable and "ornery."

His wife will tell me that in a minute she lost her old husband, and got in his place a stranger who is now a sore trial to her. Sometimes the man will suddenly lose 50 pounds in weight. If he has long had an increase in blood pressure, when a little stroke comes the pressure is likely to drop to normal and perhaps to stay there.

One of the commonest ways of dying is to go slowly, step by step, with one tiny stroke after another. The man who used to stand so straight and used to stride along with such strong steps now is slowed-up both mentally and physically; his face may look dull; he may walk with small tottery steps; he may shove his feet along; he may get a shaking palsy in his hands, he may get careless about bathing or changing his linen, and he may go out on the street with soup down his coat.

The sad thing is that, as yet, we doctors don't know of any way of keeping the little strokes from coming, and sometimes we cannot do much to help these people to get rid of their symptoms. The best thing, probably, is for a person not to get stout; not to eat too much; and particularly not to eat too much fat. Sometimes the giving of iodides seems to help in clearing away the symptoms.

Do Men Have A Change of Life?

Many physicians assume that men have a sort of change of life, much like that of women, but I have never been able to accept the idea. I do not feel there is enough proof for it, and there is much proof against it. For instance, a powerfully-built and athletic university professor felt a bit depressed and dissatisfied with life when he was in his forties, and was sent to me with the diagnosis of a male menopause. I could not find anything wrong with the man physically; he could still play a match-type of tennis and his glands of internal secretion seemed all to be functioning well. I thought his tendency to moodiness could easily be explained, partly on the basis of his family tendency to depressions, and partly on certain dissatisfactions he had had in life. His colorless and prudish wife had never made him happy, and this seemed to explain his flare-up of interest in sex.

Later, when after the death of his wife, he married a charming and well-sexed woman, he was happy and remained so as long as I knew him. Much against the idea of a male menopause was the fact that 25 years later, when I happened to run into him, he told me that sexually he was almost as active as when he was fifty.

Dr. Alvarez hopes his readers will understand that it would be impossible for him to answer requests for information or to attempt to diagnose by mail.
