The Medical Roundup

by Walter Sawyer

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

Compulsions

Many nervous people want to know what they can do for their compulsive thoughts. A sweet, lovely woman may be terribly distressed because in church she feels a strong impulse to stand up and curse the minister, or she may feel that sometimes she might injure a child. Some nice people are distressed because they are compelled to think lascivious thoughts which are foreign to their nature and their sense of morality. Others feel compelled to perform a lot of ritualistic acts, such as washing the hands six times before they go out. The last woman I found doing this said that she had an idea that by doing it she could keep her father from getting another coronary heart attack. She felt because of his first attack had followed a heated argument with her when she had lost her temper.

In many such cases a kind and sensible psychiatrist can help the person perhaps to accept his (her) thoughts and not be upset over them. The great Dr. Austin Riggs used to tell his patients with evil thoughts to take their essential goodness for granted—which is a good idea. It helps many of my patients to know that most persons at times get unpleasant and unwanted thoughts. Some great man once said that most of us would soon be kicked out of good society if the people around us could read our thoughts! We cannot always keep the troublesome thoughts from coming into our minds, but we can see to it that we do not make them welcome and help them to settle down with us.

Convulsions in Children

Mothers ask if fever convulsions in a child means that he will later have epilepsy. Figures vary, but the facts are that in many cases the child who is having convulsions in infancy will have petit mal (little lapses of consciousness) during his childhood, and he may have some form of epilepsy or an equivalent of epilepsy in his later years.

If I had a grandchild who was having fever convulsions I would want, first, to look through the family record to see if there was any epilepsy or anything that looked like epilepsy.

New Delhi, India — Water is selling for two annas (about two cents) a glass in Fatehpur Sikri near the city of Agra in north central India, it was reported today. The area has had a heat wave for the past few weeks.
