Members of the 1957 Oregon Shakespearean festival company were guests Tuesday of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred S. V. Carpenter, Topside. Each year the Carpenters invite the company to their home on Old Stage road for swimming, badminton or other games, and a picnic luncheon in the garden.

Oregon College Scientists Undertake Vitamin Study

Corvallis — New evidence on ways vitamins function in normal healthy humans is being sought by Oregon State college nutritionists.

To learn what vitamin needs are for the normal healthy adult, and to find ways to measure vitamin absorption in the tissues is the study's aim.

To determine vitamin requirements of normal healthy adults, four persons went on identical 30-day constant diets to measure vitamin levels of vitamin C (ascorbic acid), and three B vitamins—B1 (thiamine), B2 (riboflavin), and niacin. Researchers measured the vitamin levels in different fractions of the blood—the red and white cells and the serum or plasma.

According to Dr. Clara Storvick, head of home economics research at OSC, certain fractions of the blood may be more sensitive than others in reflection of vitamin deficiencies.

Dr. Storvick also pointed out that excessive intake of one vitamin may lead to a deficiency in some other vitamin. For instance, when the intake of one B vitamin is increased, requirements for other associated B vitamins is stepped up. Other general findings are given about these vitamins which have been under study the past ten years.

Unlike fat-soluble vitamins A and D which are stored in the body, vitamin C is not stored and needs to be supplied to the body daily. Natural ascorbic acid containing foods include orange juice, strawberries, tomatoes and grapefruit. Vitamin C is essential for maintenance of healthy cells, particularly in gum tissues.

Thiamine content of the blood was determined for cattle, hogs, sheep, turkeys, horses, rabbits, mink and hamsters. Animals from the Portland zoo—the bear, lion, deer, mouflon sheep and monkey were also used in OSC tests.

Researchers found that hogs had 10 times as much thiamine in the blood as horses and twice as much as humans. Most animal products, especially pork and beef liver, are natural rich sources of thiamine. Thiamine is needed in utilization of carbohydrates.
