

Lectures To Be Held In Ashland

Ashland—Dr. Margery Bailey, director of the Institute of Renaissance Studies, the educational department of the Oregon Shakespearean festival, has announced two special events for this week, both open to the public at a charge of 50 cents.

Wednesday, August 21, the fourth of the Trinity noon lectures will take place at Trinity hall in Ashland. James Sandoe will read Marlowe's "Tragic History of Dr. Faustus." Sandoe, director of this year's festival presentations of "Othello" and "Two Gentlemen of Verona," is professor of humanities and purchasing librarian at the University of Colorado.

He is also widely known as an anthologist and critic for the New York Herald Tribune in the field of crime fiction. In his seventh season with the festival, he has directed many of its most admired productions, including "Antony and Cleopatra," "Richard II," "Measure for Measure," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and the "Henry VI" trilogy.

Thursday, August 22, the fourth of the Gresham lectures is scheduled for 4 P.M. at the Ashland Library Assembly room. "Biography in Tudor England" is the subject to be discussed by Gerard Barker of Stanford university. Explaining the topic, Dr. Bailey commented that "The form of the biography is strongly Renaissance in character, since medieval 'lives' were usually moral examples or royal records in chronicles of the time. They were always flattering or idealized. The Renaissance, bringing new interest in actual experiences and political figures, seeks increasingly for motives, and spends time on exact details. In Tudor days the biography was often a memoir from personal observation or memory. This was the case with George Cavendish's "Life of Wolsey," which was the source of Shakespeare's "Henry VIII."

Visitor Praises Oregon Festival

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Smith of Los Altos, Calif., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Ansley E. Hutchinson, 912 South Holly street.

Mr. Smith, a chemist with the Stanford Research Institute, worked with Mr. Hutchinson during the early 1920s while they were both employed by the United States Forest Service on the Flathead National Forest in Montana. This is their first visit since that time.

While here Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Hutchinson, and the Hutchinson's daughter, Peggyann, attended the Oregon Shakespearean festival showing of "Two Gentlemen of Verona." Mrs. Smith, a grade school teacher, had attended a production at the Stratford Theatre, Stratford-on-Avon, England last summer.

She said that the costumes at the Ashland theatre were more authentic than those used in England as the English costumes are made of nylon. She also mentioned the theatre banners and costumes of the volunteer workers here as the Stratford theatre does not have them.

Before returning to California the Smiths traveled to Crater Lake National park.

Classrooms to Bulge in Fall; Predict 42 Million Students

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Correspondent
New York—Some jottings from the back-to-school front.

That classroom bulge is growing bigger. Government statisticians say that in the next month some 42,000,000 students will head for the classroom. This is 2,500,000 more than last year, with enrollment expected to be higher in both secondary schools and colleges.

Here is how the total is broken down: Grade school enrollment, including kindergarten, expected to be 30,670,000; high school, 8,424,000; college, 3,244,000.

The old-fashioned slate has disappeared from the classroom. But they still are using the blackboard, now often turned green. The Childcraft Equipment company manufacturer of school supplies, said green blackboards which came into popularity two years ago now account for about half its sales. The green is supposed to be restful to the eyes.

Abraham Lincoln is said to have used charcoal and the back of a shovel to do his homework. Today's child has unlimited facilities, including pencils in 72 colors for everything from handwriting to map work.

Clyde Nissen, executive vice president of the Lead Pencil Manufacturers' association, said pencils are fatter, because they are easier for a child to grasp. Tablets, he said, are becoming smaller. Pencil boxes, once conservative rectangles, now reflect Childish interest in everything from Roy Rogers to space travel.

They are shaped like airplanes, rockets, and baseball bats, and embossed with pictures of sports figures or cowboy heroes.

Nissen said the ball point pen has not blotted pencil sales; per capita usage of pencils is at its highest, nine each year.

"And next to big business and Uncle Sam, school children are our best customers," he said. "This, despite the fact a lot of their pencils are filched from Pop's office."

Daughter Here

Houseguest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Marrs Gibbons on Old Military road is their daughter, Mrs. Joseph Hadley, Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Hadley, the former Miss Jean Gibbons, will return to her home the first part of September after spending three weeks in the valley.

New Records Set at Festival Saturday

Ashland—Several new records were set at last Saturday night's performance of "As You Like It" at the Oregon Shakespearean Festival theatre in Ashland.

The house was completely sold out, with several patrons purchasing standing room tickets. It was also the largest audience to attend a play in the festival's history, according to Bill Patton, manager. In addition, it was the earliest point in any season that a performance has been sold out.

With attendance remaining high and advance sales still climbing, the festival is also continuing to garner nationwide publicity. Angus L. Bowmer, festival producing director, was recently interviewed by Frank Pinnock, news director at KMED in Medford. The tape recording will be used Aug. 22 on "Life and the World," a nationwide NBC radio show. The festival's own coast-to-coast NBC broadcast, highlights of "As You Like It," will be aired at 6:05 p.m. (PST) Wednesday, Aug. 26, Patton said.

John Williams, KMED program director, has supervised and recorded three features for use on the famed NBC show "Monitor." Participating in them were Bowmer, festival music director Bernard Windt, and the theater's choreographer, Marcia Taylor.

Robert Bannister, artist for the Ford Motor company publication "Ford Times," is currently in Ashland doing preliminary sketches of the festival and surrounding area. The finished paintings will illustrate a story about the festival slated for publication next summer in
