Leapfrog with Boats

WHILE OUTBOARD motoring is one of America's fastest-growing sports, few of us expect to roar full-throttle over the water, jumping our boats up wooden ramps, past sunken logs, over barricades, and even up onto dry land!

Daredevil drivers often put their craft through such spine-chilling shenanigans—partly in the interest of better design and safety for less foolhardy sportsmen.

The Outboard Motors Manufacturers Association says we'll spend almost a billion dollars on the sport this year; by 1960, more than six million of us will own outboards. And the demand is for ever-more-powerful motors. One manufacturer recently introduced a six-cylinder, 60-horsepower model!

Meeting this demand for speed without sacrificing weight, durability, or safety is the problem jump drivers help solve. At Lake Eloise, Fla., these men use special 13-foot, 200-pound runabouts which are 54 inches wide and have a slight vee shape forward. Hitting 40 miles an hour, they jump as high as 18 feet and soar for another 50 while cutting motors through hundreds of speed, endurance, and maneuverability tests.

From these stunts have come many design improvements. Today's motors have features that were unknown a few years ago—things like electric starters, slip-clutch propellers, and remote controls. Tomorrow may bring other innovations to make motorboating even more fun.
