My Day

By Eleanor Roosevelt
(Trade Mark Registered U.S. Patent Office)

Berlin, Germany — It was truly a luxurious flight here on Pan American's President Special, but the night seemed rather short. I went to sleep about 10 p.m. and was being offered breakfast at what was 3:40 a.m. by my time. But it was 8 a.m. in London.

We had only time to stretch our legs and walk a little in London before we started off again for Frankfurt, Germany. But there we had several hours between flights to Berlin.

It was the first time I had been in Frankfurt since February, 1946, and it is, of course, an entirely different city. At that time, wherever you looked there was rubble. Now the rubble is all cleaned up.

Much rebuilding and much repairing to old buildings has been done, and I think the saddest thing was to return to the Roemer, which once was one of the beautiful squares of Europe, and see how little is left there to remind one of the past.

We walked from there to the cathedral, and the proportions of the church, with its graceful red sandstone columns, still give you some feeling of the old effect. But there is only one stained glass window left in the cathedral to remind one of the beauty that once was.

Somehow, as I looked at it, I felt more keenly than ever that it is wicked for human beings to be destroyed beauties that should belong to the world and not to any individual country. Certainly there was enough beauty destroyed in the last war to give us all pause. And if we are not moved by the destruction of human life, we should be conscious of the fact that history forever will hold the nations that destroyed so much that was beautiful responsible for depriving the world of those things essential to culture.

We visited the Goethe house, the facade of which remained almost untouched by war. And much of the furniture taken out during the war has now been returned to its place.

One of the most remarkable clocks I have ever seen stands in the stairway hall on the second floor. It is still running and gives the year, the month and the day.

In the bottom of the clock there is a medallion inserted with a black cutout bear on a leash, which is held by a little boy. As the hour strikes, the bear and the boy move. I could not help thinking how that clock must have delighted generations of children.

This was a spacious house in which Goethe grew up. The kitchen, which still has the well from which water was drawn right inside, is fascinating. The beautiful copper saucepans and molds of different kinds make a beautiful show. I am sure they loved food in this house and saw to it that it was good.

At 5:54 p.m. we took off for Berlin and arrived at 7:30 p.m. The U.S. general in command here sent his car to meet us, which I thought was kind, and much to my delight I found a young aide, Colonel Pough, who had been at the White House and had ridden with me on some of my early morning rides.

The colonel was very kind and saw us to our hotel. We also were met by Dr. Ulich-Biell, who will take me to see some of her work. She is head of the Women's Organization here, which is the counterpart of our League of Women Voters.—E.R.

Job Seekers Nearly Double Year Ago

Salem—Seasonal harvest operations eased off slightly during the last half of August, bringing the number of job seekers to the highest point since mid-May, the State Unemployment Compensation Commission has reported.

Some 26,300 persons were actively seeking jobs, nearly double last September's total of 14,200.

Payments to covered workers reached $1,310,000, the highest August figure ever except for 1949.

Heaviest increases in the number of unemployed came from Eugene, Roseburg, Lebanon and Coos Bay, although many other offices reported more job seekers than last month or last year. Some timber centers said logging operations already were closing down because of slackening demand for lumber.

Portland counted fewer persons out of jobs than a month ago, but a rise of 5,400 or 73 per cent from last year. Oregon City and Hillsboro estimated twice as many unemployed as in 1956.

Now Standard refines a rare "rock" to give U.S. a new source of gasoline

High pressure water jet shatters solid Gilsonite. Flume hose washes particles down mine floor to pipeline.

Petroleum products are now being made without crude oil. Standard found the answer in a rare hydrocarbon called Gilsonite. But it took $16,000,000 and a vast research program to do it. Deep in the mountains of Utah our scientists worked out a better, faster way to mine Gilsonite. Meanwhile our engineers designed the nation's first pipeline capable of carrying solids suspended in water... over a rugged terrain to a spot 72 miles away.

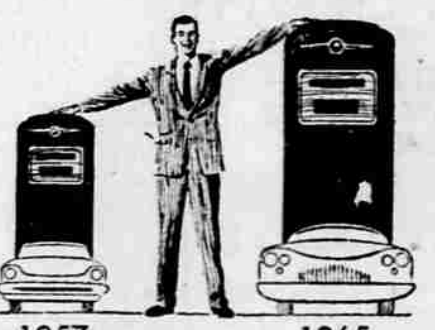

There Standard* built the nation's first privately financed refinery to make petroleum products from a material other than crude oil. Today that refinery turns Gilsonite into high octane gasoline for motorists, and the purest coke known for making steel, aluminum and other metals. In our country's search for new sources of fuel, the development of Gilsonite is a major breakthrough. It means the equivalent of 100,000,000 barrels of oil added to U.S. underground reserves—important help in meeting our country's growing petroleum needs.
