Legislation Discussed At Labor Meeting

A review of legislation concerning labor and a benefit to Oregon residents was presented to members of the Medford Central Labor council Thursday by J. D. McDonald, president of the Oregon State Labor council, of Portland.

He also made several remarks about what union members should expect at the special session of the legislature to be called Oct. 15.

A review of the state convention of the AFL at Klamath Falls was given. McDonald discussed resolutions passed at the convention he termed as important forward steps in the labor movement.

He urged establishment of a Medford Speakers' bureau by the Medford council similar to the one now operating in Portland. Under this system, several council members would be appointed to each important subject concerning community problems.

The speakers would be available to any organization and not only explain labor's position on problems but would be able to contribute manpower for community projects such as voter registration and the United Medford Crusade.

McDonald is currently touring all labor councils in the state to review legislation passed in the last session.
