Strike Talk Threat To Telephone Service

Denver, Colo. — Denver spokesman for both the Western Electric Co. and Communications Workers of America Monday said a strike tying up the nation's telephone system is an immediate possibility.

A. J. Boesch, Western Electric distribution manager in Denver, said New York negotiations are "not proceeding well."

H. V. Wagner, president of Denver Local 8490, CWA, said a strike may be called "within two days" over the Union's demand for a general 16 cent hourly raise, and other issues.

A strike would directly involve 1,937 Union installation workers in seven Rocky Mountain states.

Picket lines would presumably keep an additional 2,400 workers of Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph company away from their jobs.
