

Russians May Stir Up More Trouble Than It Can Control

Washington—U. S. diplomats fear that Russia will stir up more trouble in the Middle East than it can control.

Over the long pull, it could lead to a showdown between the United States and Russia in the strategic oil-rich region.

Deputy Undersecretary of State Robert Murphy has said in the past that "the high degree of irresponsible behavior by the Soviet Union" in the Middle East is a matter of great concern to the United States.

The Russians, he said, appear to be trying to weaken the entire region and "keep it in a constant state of turmoil and chaos."

Tension To Remain High
Whatever the outcome, one thing seems sure—tension in the area will remain high as both sides gamble for Arab favor. The primary current in the East-West power struggle in the Middle East is guns and ammunition.

Although officials say privately that the Syrian crisis continues grave, the United States publicly is trying to soft-pedal it.

Last week it was a different story. Administration officials then were branding the Syrian pro-Soviet shift "extremely dangerous" and a possible threat to free world security.

They were reminding them that there is a "big stick" that could be used in the Eisenhower Doctrine.

Within Reach
But this week Secretary of State John Foster Dulles switched to softer language and put the "big stick" behind the door—but within easy reach if needed.

Russia, however is not diminishing her attacks on the West. Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko said Tuesday that a threat of armed intervention in Syria's internal affairs is "being created" by the United States.

Syria is following the Soviet lead. She charged that U. S. warships in the Eastern Mediterranean menaced her coast in an "open challenge," and warned that she is prepared to meet all emergencies with necessary steps.

In the broad sweep of history, the Middle Eastern situation seems to be developing at an alarming rate, according to experts.

Turning Point
Just two years ago this month, they recall, the world suddenly woke to find that Egypt was buying Communist-built submarines, jet fighters, bombers, and other modern defensive weapons. This signaled a dramatic turning point in Middle Eastern history.

For the first time, Russia had out-manuevered Western influence in a key Middle Eastern state.

The Soviet move to pump arms into the Middle East was in line with pro-Communist Russia's traditional effort to gain warm water ports, impose its influence on the Middle East, and cripple Western oil supplies.

Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov in 1940 informed Hitler Germany, then Russia's ally, that "The Soviet Union declares its territorial aspirations center south of the national territory of the Soviet Union in the direction of the Indian Ocean."

This description covers the general area of the oil-rich Middle East.
