Rockets To Search From Ice-Breaker

Boston—The Navy ice-breaker USS Glacier sails for the South Pole Monday, equipped with high-flying rockets which will search out scientific data 80 miles in space.

The ship also will carry supplies and manpower to American scientists now living on the antarctic ice mass.

Scientists aboard the 319-foot ship plan to conduct most of their experiments off the coast of Florida, in the Caribbean Sea and at pre-determined spots in the Pacific near Christmas Island.

Each of the five-foot rockets will be attached to a balloon capable of reaching an 81,000-foot altitude in two hours. The rockets will then be automatically fired and in 10 minutes will soar 80 miles into the stratosphere, before dropping into the ocean.

Bids will be received until Sept. 30 on a station wagon for the Medford police department, city officials have announced.

Bids were called recently on a 1957 model with an eight cylinder motor and automatic transmission. It will include regular patrol car equipment.

Police said the station wagon will be on regular patrols. Station wagons have been used in eastern cities for some time, but are relatively new in the northwest.

Extra space provided in a station wagon is one factor in selecting that type vehicle for service, police said.

Soviet Ships Arrive, Syrians Set Curfew

Nicosia, Cyprus—Damascus Radio announced an immediate nighttime curfew on the highways linking Syria's main cities Saturday night. It coincided with arrival of two Soviet warships on the Syrian coast.

Regular programs were interrupted for the military declaration which said the 9 p.m.-5 a.m. ban on civilian traffic is "due to general movements and maneuvering to be carried out by the Syrian army."

Syria ordered the curfew shortly after the Red Navy Cruiser Zhadnov and an escorting destroyer arrived on a "courtesy" visit at Syria's main Mediterranean port of Latakia.

The order included Latakia as well as the capital, Damascus, among the cities affected.
