Maine Governor Asserts Democrats 'Party of Change'

Portland — Gov. Edward S. Muskie of Maine, first Democrat to hold the chief executive's office in that state in 20 years, toured the Columbia gorge area with Gov. Robert D. Holmes Sunday after speaking Saturday night to some 800 Democrats who paid $10 each for the Jefferson-Jackson day dinner.

'Party of Change'
Muskie, who like Holmes ended a long GOP rule in his state's executive office, told Democrats Saturday night that "the Democratic party is the party of change." He said there now is "a tendency to dwell too much on the accomplishments of Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman."

He said Democrats realize that every citizen wants to be able to earn a living, provide for his children and live out his days in dignity and self respect. He said these objectives should be applied as a test to any problem, including the one "that now confronts the South."

Muskie and Holmes gave informal talks Sunday before a meeting of the Democratic State Central Committee.

Agrees To Suggestion
Holmes agreed to a suggestion that he meet regularly with county Democratic officials to work out problems. He also suggested a program to assess manpower available for appointive vacancies.

Holmes and Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.) criticized Oregon Republicans at Saturday night's dinner. And Neuberger was critical of those who blame Oregon's tax structure for its economic problems.
