Fish-Saving Proposals Made

Sacramento — The California Department of Fish and Game has offered three proposals for minimizing striped bass destruction by commercial netters and materially increasing escapement of spawning salmon from nets in the Sacramento river.

The recommendations are that (1) gill nets be eliminated from Grizzly and Honker bay flats to effect maximum preservation of striped bass; (2) methods be developed for taking salmon and sold commercially which will not destroy striped bass; (3) gill netting in the river be eliminated, except for spring shad and salmon seasons, adjusted to April 15 through May 31, and except for fall salmon season adjusted to Aug. 10 through Sept. 5 and Sept. 20 through Sept. 30. Week end closures should be continued.

A fourth "conditional" recommendation by the department proposes that if effective salmon spawning does not approach the level of 400,000 to 500,000 spawners in the fall of 1957, reduction in both commercial and sports salmon take in the ocean and further curtailment in the river should be effected by emergency action of the legislature in 1958 and by the Fish and Game commission on sports fishing.

If recovery of the salmon fishery isn't indicated in the 1958 fall salmon spawning run, still more drastic restrictions should be imposed on all segments of the fishery to preserve the species.

The department listed as the major problems of the fisheries: 1. A decrease in 1956 from an average of 500,000 fish in the spawning count to only 200,000. 2. A gradual decline in striped bass in Sacramento river and delta while sports fishing pressure increases. 3. The deleterious effect on striped bass in the taking of salmon and shad. 4. Intensified conflict of interest between sportsmen and commercial netters.
