

Senate Probers Asking Missile Data; Investigation Expected

Washington — Senate investigators, spurred by Russia's Sputnik, began asking the Pentagon for missile data today in what could become the most important investigation of the coming session of Congress.

Informed sources said Defense Department agencies were getting requests from the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee for the latest information on United States missile programs. The requests carry a priority label, they said.

The same government sources said the Central Intelligence Agency will be asked for its best appraisal of the Soviet's missile program which zoomed Russia's earth-circling satellite into its orbit last week end.

'Complete' Inquiry Asked
The subcommittee's quiet call for information came as one of its members said the full Senate Armed Services Committee should hold "complete" hearings on the question. Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.), recalled that the full committee conducted the widely publicized investigation of former President Truman's dismissal of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Symington, a long-time critic of the administration's handling of missile programs, wired his views to Chairman Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), of the Armed Services Committee. Russell disclosed Monday the staff of the Preparedness Subcommittee was launching a study.

Russell, advising Symington the Preparedness Subcommittee staff would assemble "all available facts," said the study should help determine "the wisest course to pursue."

Russell's statement made it clear the future course of the committee's missile investigation will depend on the study. Symington's statement — plus the concern voiced by other committee members — made it equally clear only a full-scale investigation will satisfy some congressional leaders.

Three Factors Said Restraining Oregon

Eugene — Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.) speaking before a dinner meeting of Lane county Democrats Tuesday night, said three factors are "restraining" Oregon's economic progress.

The factors, he said, "which are as devastating to Oregon's prosperity as the scourge wrought by the Horsemen of the Apocalypse," are:

1. High interest tight money policies which curtailed new home construction and reduced output in Oregon's lumber industry.

2. Choking off of new supplies of low-cost power needed to attract new industry and new payrolls.

3. Steadily advancing railroad freight rates which place a competitive burden on Oregon producers and throttle ability to sell Oregon goods and produce in major Eastern markets.

The senator said that Oregon's prosperity is closely geared to business in the lumber industry. He also told the group that Oregon "is in its greatest period of industrial growth during the first low-cost Bonneville power came on the lines." "Low-cost power is the key to payrolls," he said.

Low-cost power is the key to payrolls, he said.

THREE-POINT LANDING

Oakland, Calif. — Capt. W. R. McDaniel made a fine landing here Tuesday in a twin-engine Air Force plane—despite the fact that he bounced it all the way down the runway. The trouble was (1) one engine caught fire and conked out; (2) the landing mechanism wouldn't work and the wheels had to be lowered by hand; and (3) something went wrong with the plane's flaps.
