New Respiratory Ailments Reported In Midwest Cities

By UNITED PRESS

New outbreaks of respiratory ailments hit a number of mid-western cities today. In New York, authorities warned that about one million persons are expected to be stricken with Asian flu before the disease runs its course.

Fort Wayne, Ind., and Normal and Peoria, Ill., were among the latest cities to report "flu-type" illnesses.

In Milwaukee, mass vaccinations for teachers were underway to combat a flu epidemic there, and another epidemic at Grand Rapids, Mich., kept some 5,000 children home from school Monday.

Decline in New York

Although the Asian flu epidemic in New York showed a decline Monday for the fourth straight day, Dr. Morris Greenberg, the city's preventable disease director, warned that one in every 10 of New York's 10 million residents are expected to come down with the flu.

New York Schools Superintendent William Jensen termed the school absentee rate "alarming," with 280,164 of the city's 964,952 students absent and 3,442 teachers missing from classes.

At Fort Wane, Health Commissioner Robert Lohman said it was impossible to tell immediately if that city's epidemic was an outbreak of Asian flu.
