By UNITED PRESS

Maebashi, Japan—Akikichi Sakai, widower of the woman killed by Army S-3 William Girard as she was gathering shell casings on an Army firing range.

"Life is extremely valuable. However, one should hate the crime, not the person connected with it."

Seattle—Retired Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson, in warning that the U.S. long range guided missile program should not be allowed to intensify the world armaments race:

"I wouldn't understate or overstate missiles, but in themselves they're just another weapon. They won't solve world problems."

Washington—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, in saying she saw no one laugh during her three-week tour of Soviet Russia:

"I have a feeling they have sold their souls for a little economic security."

New York—Hank Bauer, whose seventh-inning home run gave the New York Yankees a 3-2 victory over the Milwaukee Braves and tied the World Series at three games each:

"I've gotten a few hits since I started playing ball for a living but this one was the biggest one of my life. A guy could hardly ask for much more."

Washington—William Sutherland, private secretary to K. A. Gbedemah, Ghana finance minister who was invited to breakfast with President Eisenhower after being refused service in a Delaware restaurant because of his color:

"Compared to the invitation to have breakfast with President Eisenhower, and the honored treatment he (Gbedemah) has received elsewhere in this country, he doesn't feel too bad any more about the restaurant affair."

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a woman's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Mrs. G. P.—Our son's wife is a tyrant.

Roland P.—Things aren't so easy for her.

Mrs. G. P.—Don't get the idea that my husband and I are interfering in-laws, because we aren't. We have five married children and have never interfered in any way. But when someone is hurting your child, you'd have to be inhuman to be able to stand coldly by.

The problem concerns our son, Roland. He is 32 and has been married for eight years. His wife is a regular tyrant. She makes so many demands on Roland he never has a minute to rest and enjoy life. He works very hard to supply her and the three children with the best of everything.

But when he is home, he must work every minute, building things, painting, mowing the lawn, fixing everything around the house. She will never call in any outside help because she says they have to save for the children's education.

We have tried to get Roland to stand up for himself like a man. But he hasn't the nerve to cross her in anything. He is over-worked, it's pathetic to see him sometimes. Is this the way to live?

Roland P.—I haven't known know what it is to relax in eight years. That's the truth. I don't think I'd know how to any more. But my parents don't seem to realize things aren't so easy for my wife.

Her parents are very well off and she comes from a home where she only had to snap her fingers to get everything she wanted. Now she must do all her own work and it's not easy in a home the size of ours.

She doesn't spare herself any more than she spares me. She doesn't take it easy while I work. She is a perfectionist and I must say we have the most beautiful, well-cared-for home I've seen any place.

The worst of it is, Ethel is hard to please. I always feel things fall far short of her expectations when I finish a job. She can do most things far better than I can.

When I try to tell her things don't have to be so perfect, she says "a man can't understand." But I know my mother isn't like that. I've asked her to talk to Ethel, but she's afraid of her, too.

The Council: Sometimes tyrants and perfectionists have to be saved from themselves and this sounds like one of those cases. Probably most of them secretly long for someone to have the courage to oppose and conquer them.

"Good" tyrants, like Ethel, manage to find some worthy cause to uphold, and that further intimidates their subjects. Ethel's desire for a beautifully ordered home cuts the ground from would-be rebels. How can any well-intentioned individual fight such idealism, especially when the leader herself seems ready to lay down her life for the cause?

But certainly Ethel should be opposed and Roland, not his mother, must be the one to do it. Roland should point out that, as a couple, they are the slaves of their home, not the masters of it.

If reason doesn't work, he should use more forceful methods—such as the sit-down strike. He might also try kidnapping. Get Ethel away from that home of hers and show her the pleasant world outside her obsession.

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

ODGEN NASH confesses, "At the age of 43 I was stage struck, and that caused an odd bit of whimsy, 'The Sweet Bye and Bye,' which said bye-bye to Broadway in exactly ten days. At one performance, the leading lady, looking through the stage curtain peep hole, murmured, 'The audience appears to be in a nasty mood tonight.' Don't worry, the leading man reassured her. 'We'll probably outnumber them!'"

Herr Brockhaus, publisher of Schopenhauer's works in Germany, once sent the philosopher a gold watch for Christmas. Schopenhauer said, "Thank you—but the watch doesn't go." Brockhaus replied, "I guess it takes after your last book. That's not going, either."

Herb Stein defines a burlesque censor as one who "always has a grind to axe."

Design on Easter Cards Traced To Ancient Rome

New York — The cross-

with-flowers, still a popular design on Easter cards, can be traced to the days of the early Christians in ancient Rome. Worshipping in secret without music or pageantry to escape persecution, they drew crosses entwined with flowers on the walls of the catacombs where services were held.

Registration of Wells Is Important, Official Says

Corvallis—Reports of water tables dropping in scattered locations of western Oregon are emphasizing to farmers the importance of establishing priorities on irrigation wells by registering them before Aug. 3, 1958, Marvin Shearer, Oregon State college irrigation specialist, said today.

Louis Stanley, state engineer, Salem, said "failure to register a well before Aug. 3, 1958, will result in a loss of any vested right which may exist by reason of actual appropriation and use of ground water prior to the effective date of Oregon's Ground Water act, Aug. 3, 1955."

All irrigation wells constructed in Oregon since Aug. 3, 1955, have required permits that establish a legal right for water use, Stanley noted. Permits and rights for eastern Oregon wells constructed prior to 1955 in compliance with the old Ground Water act of 1927 are recognized and require no action by the well owner.

Watering Livestock The 1955 law does not apply to wells used for watering livestock, lawns, or for non-commercial gardens not exceeding one-half acre. Also exempt from registration are wells for single or group domestic uses not exceeding 15,000 gallons a day or for industrial or commercial purposes not exceeding 5,000 gallons a day.
