Sacramento — Lawmen staged a roundup here Saturday, not of criminals, but of 99 head of cattle. Some were "dangerous."

The operation followed the collision of two loaded livestock trucks at a city intersection.

Among the animals pouring into the street, said police, were several "dangerous" range steers. Local radio stations broadcast warnings to residents of the area.

A report reached police headquarters that one steer charged a boy, but the child was unhurt. Another steer locked horns with an auto.

By late afternoon, county and city lawmen and workers from the local humane society had rounded up all but a few of the animals. Seventeen were so badly injured in their rush through the streets they had to be shot. Others were shifted to new trucks and sent on their way.

Neither truck driver was injured in the crash.
