'Normal' Human Being Exceedingly Rare, Professor Declares

By DELOS SMITH
United Press Science Editor
New York—Scientists are twitted by a distinguished colleague because they're always demonstrative statistically that there is such a creature as a "normal" or "standard" human being.

Dr. Roger J. Williams, professor of chemistry at University of Texas, and former president of the American Chemical society. He demonstrated statistically that if there is such a creature he is exceedingly rare.

By one statistical calculation, he showed there was one "standard" person in every 1,024. With another calculation, he showed that if you assumed almost all 99.8 per cent Americans to be "normal," only one individual in five would actually measure up to that broad standard.

Bodies Are Varied
Williams was having scientific fun with statistics and statistical assumptions and also advancing his own pet theory which is that body chemistry is as varied as there are bodies and this variety make it impossible for one individual to be the same as any other individual.

What happens if you measure human beings for more than one thing. Now, said Williams, suppose you take only one measurement and apply it to a group of human beings and assume that the 50 per cent who come closest to measuring the same are "normal" or "standard."

Having done that, apply the measurements of five different things to these "normals" and you find that, statistically, only 0.03 per cent remain so. Apply measurements of 100 different things to them and the percentage of "normals" diminishes to a barely detectable 0.0059 per cent.

Studies Blood Plasma
Williams based himself statistically on precise measurements of fats found in the blood plasma of 65 men at different ages. Seven chemical measurements of these men's blood chemistry were made. Any one measurement placed 33 in the middle or

Solon Warns Against Satellite Hysteria
Phoenix (A.R.)—Sen. Barry Goldwater, (R-Ariz.), has warned against national "hysteria, just because the Russians have lobbed a basketball into outer space that goes beep, beep, beep."

Wrong Number Given Blame in Tot's Death
Chicago—A wrong number caused a baby's death. Mrs. Judith Schlaeger was bathing her two-month-old son in the kitchen sink when the telephone rang.

North Long Beach, Calif.—Three-year-old Stanley Edward Phillips, found after a three-hour nighttime search, had a ready excuse for his mommie. "I followed a duck," he explained.
