

Sputnik Will Put Further Dent In Pocketbook of U.S. Taxpayers

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Correspondent
Washington — Speculation may as well cease about where the Red Sputnik will fall, when it falls.

The Sputnik will fall upon and flatten the United States taxpayer's pocketbook, even flatter, than the administration is complacent about that although, from President Eisenhower down, the evidence is in that the lid of government spending is likely to be blown off again. Blown off and away with the lid surely would be any chance of tax reductions soon or maybe, ever in the lifetimes of any but the very young. Likewise may be blown away such progress as has been made under the Republican Eisenhower administration toward continued sequence of balanced budgets. And blown, too, will be such opportunity as may be offered to check and control inflation by the reduction of government expenditures.

Too Much Credit Given
The foregoing seems to be about what may be expected as the political impact of Sputnik, which the Russians hoisted into the sky before the United States put its own little moon in orbit. It probably would give the Kremlin too much credit for craft and cunning to assume that the Communist high command planned it that way. It is a fact, however, that an axiom of the Communist creed as stated by Lenin and some of his successors was that the de-mocracies had a built-in, self-destructing weakness which was that democracies inevitably must spend themselves to death. True or not, that is what the Communists believe.

President Eisenhower, in his Oct. 9 news conference, told how the scientists had come to him for $22 million, then $66 million and, finally, $110 million for the U.S. satellite project—and that he always had provided what they asked.

"There never has been one nickel asked for speeding up the program," he said firmly when pressed for the satellite into the orbit first, and, he added:

Ike Did All He Could
"I have provided to the limit of my ability the money that they (the scientists) asked for and that is all I can do."

The scientists took the hint. The United Press reported in mid-week that the President conferred with his top financial adviser after hearing scientists plead for more missile money.

There is congressional clamor for missile-satellite speed-up. The cost will be very great. It will be piled on top of the $5 billion already being spent annually for military research and development.

There is evidence of political and public pressure on the administration to get into an all-out scientific achievement race with the Soviet Union, however great the cost. Sputnik gave U.S. national defense a mighty booster shot.

Snowman Vanishes From Snowy Haunts Of Himalyan Peak

Milan, Italy.—The "abominable snowman" has vanished from its haunts in the ice-bound heights of the Himalyan Mountains since Mt. Everest was conquered, an Italian magazine said Saturday.

The mass-circulation weekly "Oggi" quoted Sherpa Tenzing Norkay, one of the two conquerors of the world's highest peak, as saying the storied half-man, half-beast creature disappeared after Norkay and Sir Edmund Hillary bested Mt. Everest.

The magazine said Norkay claimed he saw footprints left by the creature "countless times" on the snow-covered slopes of Chomolungma, the Nepalese name for Mt. Everest.

There have been numerous reports of mountaineers spotting the tracks of the creature, but very few persons have ever claimed to have seen it. According to those who said they had, the abominable snowman is a large shaggy bear-like creature that resembles a man somewhat.

Some said the upper part is like a man while the lower part of the body is covered with air. All agreed the beast had a very bad odor.

A total of 359,528 Union soldiers were killed or died of disease during the Civil War. Confederate losses totaled 133,785.
