

Termite Problem In Oregon Lumber Discussed Widely

Salem—The destruction of a carload of Oregon lumber this summer by the order of the Michigan director of agriculture was discussed at the annual meeting of the National Plant Board in St. Louis last week. The lumber was condemned because of the presence of the dampwood termite.

Frank McKennon, chief of the state department of agriculture's plant industry division and a delegate to the conference, reported a number of states were concerned about the presence of this pest in lumber shipped from the West Coast.

McKennon continued, "This species of pest is not known to occur except on the Pacific coast and it appears rather improbable that it would become established in other states. Officials from states receiving lumber feel they should not permit its introduction."

Oregon's plant industry chief stressed that other delegates to the convention did not feel that destruction of dampwood termite infested lumber is necessary as the pest can be eliminated by fumigation, heat treatment or drying of the lumber.

The board suggested that this should be done at point of origin to safeguard the unfested states and to avoid irritating and expensive delays and treatment procedures at the point of arrival.

As a result of the discussion, the National Plant Board is requesting each regional plant board to suggest policies or principles to guide plant quarantine officials in the disposition of infected materials were methods other than destruction of the merchant may be used.

McKennon reports the state department of agriculture plans to meet with representatives of Oregon's lumber industry to discuss a solution to the dampwood termite problem.

ELK LOSES TO CAR

Fremont, Neb. — Ann Jelinek, 20, Wahoo, Neb., bagged an elk with her car on U.S. 77 south of here. Nebraska Game Commission director Mel Steen said it was highly unusual to find an elk in Nebraska. He also pointed out that elk are very seldom killed on a highway, even in areas where they are plentiful.

Oregon Dairymen Schedule Meeting

Corvallis — Administration of Oregon's new brucellosis law, the milk audit law, and bulk handling of milk are scheduled for discussion at the Oregon Dairymen association's 64th annual meeting, Dec. 2 to 4, at Klamath Falls, it was announced.

The 1957 legislature centered administration of the brucellosis law entirely within the state department of agriculture. It was previously administered in the counties, it was explained.

The milk-usage audit law, also enacted by the last legislature, requires Grade A milk processors open their books to audit for assurance that milk distributed at Grade A prices reflect Grade A payment to farmers. Such plants make lower payment to farmers for Grade A milk that goes into manufacturing products such as cottage cheese, butter, and ice cream.

Milk-handling problems will be discussed by a panel of producers, state inspectors, industry representatives, and Oregon State college staff members, reports H. P. Ewalt, Oregon State college dairy specialist and association secretary. Topics will include bulk handling of milk, pipeline milking, and keeping quality problems of milk handled by milk methods.

Klamath Basin Milk Producers association will host the meeting at the Willard hotel starting at noon, Dec. 2.

Barley Suggested For Turkey Raising

Corvallis — Oregon turkey growers, heavy users of out-of-state corn, can cash in on the state's increasing supply of locally-produced barley, reports a new circular of information published by the Oregon State college agricultural experiment station.

Barley in combination with corn will bring cheaper gains than all corn, according to the authors of the circular, W. G. Brown, agricultural economist, and J. A. Harper, poultry researcher.

The circular, "Replacing Corn With Barley," is available from county extension offices or the OSC bulletin clerk, Corvallis. Cost charts for various feeding methods show how to get the most value from barley at the lowest cost.

Federal Poultry Inspection Asked

Salem —Requests from the poultry industry in Oregon and other states for administration of federal compulsory inspection law through the state department of agriculture were voiced at the National Association of Marketing Officials meeting held last week in Lexington, Ky.

This discussion followed a talk at the NAMO meeting by director Hermon Miller of the poultry division of USDA, on the federal poultry inspection act passed by congress at this past session. Paul T. Rowell, chief of the state department of agriculture's market development division, was Oregon's delegate.

Under the federal plan, inspection for poultry sanitation and wholesomeness will cover all processing plants doing interstate business, plus all poultry plants selling in any metropolitan area designated for inspection by the secretary of agriculture. Plants may come under its provisions by Jan. 1, 1958, upon their application, with full coverage to be in effect by Jan. 1, 1959.

Best Apple Types Given In Pamphlet

Corvallis — Recommended apple varieties for commercial production and home orchards in Oregon are listed in a bulletin just published by Oregon State college agricultural experiment station.

Established varieties and newer apples that show promise are discussed in the bulletin by Quentin Zielinski, OSC horticulturist. Varieties are listed according to time of ripening and in charts showing areas of Oregon where they are best adapted. The 30-page, illustrated booklet, "Apple Varieties for Oregon," may be obtained free from county extension agents or the OSC bulletin clerk, Corvallis.

Nearly 20 suggested varieties for home orchards, plus 10 varieties of crab apples, are listed along with ripening dates. Recommended uses of home orchard varieties—cooking, winter storage, and eating fresh—are also discussed.

September Testing Has Few Reactors

Brucellosis testing in September covered 18,226 cattle in 1,838 Oregon herds, according to the federal and state veterinarians office at Salem. There were 111 reactors in 53 herds for a reactor percentage of six-tenths of one per cent.

Jackson, Tillamook and Clatsop counties had the highest reactor percentage—all over two per cent. However, according to Dr. A. G. Beagle, in charge of federal participation here, most of the testing in these counties was confined to known infected herds.

A reactor percentage of one-tenth of one per cent was recorded for tuberculosis tests during September. Three reactors were found in 2,714 cattle tested.
