Moonwatch Activity Slows Considerably

By UNITED PRESS
Activity at Operation Moonwatch headquarters in Cambridge, Mass., has slowed considerably this week with only a few sightings of Russia's earth circling satellites filtering in.

Since last Saturday only three official sightings have been reported to the observatory—all from Sydney, Australia.
Dr. J. Allen Hynek, associate director of the observatory, said the object seen was Alpha I or Sputnik I's rocket. He added that all the sightings reports described it as a "bright object."
The observation reports came to moon watch headquarters through the Naval Research Laboratory in Washington.
The Russian satellites will not be visible in the United States until some time next month, according to the experts.

SHOW SPOT

MEDFORD (OREGON) MAIL TRIBUNE—SEVEN

Small Projectile Fired in Florida

Cape Canaveral, Fla.—(AP)—A small projectile was fired today from the Air Force Missile Test center here.

Identity of the rocket was not immediately known, but it was believed to be another Bomarc ground to air missile like the one fired Thursday.

It was not the Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile, which is believed being readied for a third firing.
The projectile zoomed up into an almost clear sky, then disappeared into the one cloudbank in the area at about 5,000 to 6,000 feet.

Televiewing Could Be 'Hazardous Occupation'
London—(AP)—The authoritative medical journal Lancet said today that televiewing could now be included in the list of "hazardous occupations."
The journal, organ of the British Medical Association, warned TV viewers against becoming too engrossed in the programs and advised them to get up and walk about at least once every hour, to prevent thrombosis in the leg. It also said that before sitting down to a night's viewing, viewers should remove girdles and other tight garments.
