Home Economist Gives Advice on Cooking Turkey

Corvallis—Don't let spoiled turkey ruin your Thanksgiving feast, advise home economists at Oregon State college. They say some homemakers are asking for trouble when they cook turkey and other meat at too low oven temperatures.

According to Mrs. Ruth Klippstein, extension nutritionist, local women have been asking about cooking turkey and other meats at oven temperatures less than 200 degrees.

College recommendations are that all meat and poultry should be roasted at oven temperatures of no less than 275 degrees. If turkeys are allowed to stand in only moderately warm ovens over long periods of time, the interior stays at room temperature, and the bacterial count in the bird begins to mount.

After excessive periods, it rises to a dangerous level and food poisoning can result. It is even more dangerous, she says, to cook big birds, 20 to 30 pounders, that are already stuffed with dressing at too low temperatures. Often the stuffing is not even heated through by the time the meat is done.

Homemakers are advised to roast turkey at 300 to 325 degrees in one cooking period, and then serve it. Meat will be just as juicy and tender, they say, if it's cooked at these temperatures, and safer to eat.

Another reminder: It's a good idea to check the oven with an inexpensive oven thermometer to see if it records temperature correctly.

Mrs. Klippstein lists this cooking timetable that shows how long to cook various turkey sizes:

8 to 10 pound bird, 325 degrees F., 20 to 25 minutes cooking time per pound, 3 to 3 1/2 hours per bird; 10 to 14 pound bird, 325 degrees F., 18 to 20 minutes per pound; 3 1/2 to 4 hours per bird; 14 to 18 pound bird, 300 degrees F., 20 minutes per pound, 4 to 4 1/2 hours per bird; 18 pound bird, 300 degrees F., 15 minutes per pound; 4 1/2 to 5 hours per bird; 20 pound bird, 300 degrees F., 15 minutes per pound; 5 to 6 hours per bird; 24 to 30 pound bird, 275-300 degrees F., 15 minutes per pound; 6 to 7 hours per bird.

After the turkey has been served, remove all the dressing from the bird, and put it in a covered bowl. Wrap the entire bird in waxed paper and refrigerate as fast as possible.

Republicans Nominate New Officers

A slate of officers, headed by Mrs. Lester Adams, Applegate, for the presidency, was presented by the 1957 nominating committee of Jackson County Republican Women yesterday at the November meeting. The session was held at the new Red Cross building and followed luncheon.

Nominated to serve with Mrs. Adams were Mrs. William E. Frake, first vice-president; Mrs. Philip B. Lowry, second vice-president; Mrs. Sheridan Scott, third vice-president; Mrs. Meyers Jones, secretary and Mrs. Frank Ross, treasurer. Mrs. Ross has served in that office the past year. Mrs. Thomas Ness headed the nominating committee.

Election will be held at the January meeting. Mrs. Wayne Stine, retiring president, speaking of the club's program and activities the past year, and her hopes for the republican party in coming years, said she believed that government now is too much "for the people" and not enough "of" and "by" the people.

Don Stathos, temporary chairman of the Jackson County Young Republican club, was speaker for the meeting talking on "Modern Republicanism." Beginning his talk by saying that the greatest problem in the nation today is the advance of socialism, Mr. Stathos added that the republican party must dedicate itself to the task of seeing that the republican form of government is maintained in the United States.

Pointing out that "principles never change," Mr. Stathos said that by "modern Republicanism" he did not mean "new dealism" and added that the party should find ways to support the principles of individual freedom of action, with responsibility for that action.

Mr. Stathos declared there is "a growing infringement by government on our human rights."

He outlined four points by which "modern republicanism" could be advanced. He said the party should "have faith and be firm in its principles, should take the positive rather than the negative approach, should seize the offensive rather than being on the defensive, and should tell the public about freedom through the republican form of government."

Mr. Stathos was introduced by Mrs. C. Weldon Kline.

Mrs. Stine spoke of the resignation of Mrs. Frank Bash as county chairman of the party, and said that a party is being planned in her honor. Mrs. Fred Peck, Mrs. C. O. Lovejoy and Mrs. Willis Scott were named to a committee to work on the party plans.

The luncheon committee was Mrs. Julie Tummers, Mrs. C. O. Lovejoy and Mrs. John Boyle.

In making jams and jellies, always melt paraffin in the top of a double boiler and not over direct heat. Otherwise, there is a danger of the paraffin bursting into flame. Should this happen, dump baking soda liberally over the flames. The soda when heated creates carbon dioxide gas, which helps smother the fire.
