Alertness Important for Collector of Old Coins

The Arkansas Centennial half dollar was in mint condition. It lay on a little piece of cotton batting just above a price tag that read $10.

"May I see that, please—the Arkansas half, that's it," Frank pointed out the coin in a showcase that held half a hundred odds and ends that had only their location in common.

The young woman running the place carefully removed the piece and set it on the counter. Frank casually turned it over, scrutinized it briefly and turned it back again.

"I'll take it," he said, fishing out his billfold and extracting a ten-spot.

I was on the point of saying that he was paying well over the top price for the piece but suddenly thought better of it. If he didn't know enough now, after years of collecting, it might do him good to have to pay through the nose for once.

COIN PATTERN PIECES RARE; ON CANDLESTICK EVEN RARER

If you ever come across any glassware with a coin design on it, give plenty of thought to it before passing it up. But if it happens to be a candlestick, take twice as much time.

There is a marked premium value on all coin glass, but candlesticks happen to be among the very rarest pieces of this type.

A friend of mine got a pair of them some months ago and for only $2. The reason that he bought them, furthermore, was that he merely wanted some candlesticks to use and chose those because they struck him as odd.

They were not particularly attractive to look at. They were ten inches high and of clear glass. Their general design and shape were both completely undistinguished. They were even common looking except for the fact that the stick, for four inches above where it joined the round base, was square in section. And each of the four faces was ornamented with the frosted replica of a ten-dollar gold piece of 1866.

That date in itself was something unusual, of course. For while almost any coin with a date prior to 1890, but not farther back than the early 1800's, may be found in coin glass, the majority of such pieces have a date late in the century.

It didn't take my friend long to discover the value of the two pieces after he bought them. He was alerted when an acquaintance tried to buy them from him for $10. He became suspicious and looked the matter up.

His suspicions were amply justified. They were worth from $125 to $200 for the pair.

PRICE OF OLD MAGAZINES RECOUPED BY STAMP FIND

Jack knew what he was doing when he gave $100 for 500 serial copies of Harper's Magazine, starting in 1862.

"I don't intend to read all of them," he said, "but there's a lot of good stuff in those pages, and it will be handy to have them available when I want them."

That was a little over two years ago. When I saw him a couple of weeks ago I asked if he were still happy with his buy.

"Best I ever made," he said. "Look at this."

From his coat pocket he produced an envelope. Out of that he shook half of another, or rather the half of the front of a stamped envelope, the half with the stamp on it.

"I found this in one of the 1876 numbers," he said. "It had been used as a page marker."

The stamp was an embossed, 30-cent item, with a classical bust, in profile, left, of Alexander Hamilton. The color was black and cream. The cancellation mark, I noticed, was quite clear, showing that the envelope

Tarnished Plant Bug Being Conquered

Geneva, N.Y.—The tarnished plant bug, one of the commonest and most troublesome pests in the insect world, at long past is being conquered by science.

F. G. Munding, entomologist at Cornell University's New York State Experiment Station here, reports that development of newer types of pesticides is slowly bringing about control of the bug, an omnivorous feeder that is found on almost any kind of plant.

Munding noted that fruit trees, berries and many flowering plants are favorite grounds of the extremely active pests, which leave misshapen and discolored fruits as evidence of their work.

The scientist, who reported there may be four or more generations of the bug in one season, explained that early control measures were mostly preventive by growing plants under cloth covers or houses.

But research has brought about new types of pesticides, said Munding, and effective control is being obtained with applications of DDT, dieldrin, TEPP, malathion and other materials.

WRONG TARGET

Mary Ann Hooplina, 17, who backed her car slowly from a driveway to avoid hitting some garbage cans, was forced to call the water department when the vehicle knocked over a fire hydrant.
