National Guard Plane Crash Fatal to Four

Juneau, Alaska — Seven Alaska Air National guardsmen were recovering in a hospital here today from injuries suffered in a plane crash at Gustavus Air Base 45 miles northwest of Juneau Saturday night. The C47 was en route from a National Guard conference at San Francisco to Anchorage and Nome, Alaska. The plane crashed during an instrument landing at the remote base.

Four men were killed in the accident. The survivors were flown out Sunday morning by Coast Guard amphibian. Killed were Capt. Bob E. Kafader, 37; 1st Lt. Dennis V. Stamey, 29; Sgt. Floyd S. Porter, 29, and David O. Dial, 34, all of the Anchorage area. The injured victims were also Alaskans.

Survivors said there was no indication of trouble prior to the crash. Alaska Air Command investigators will attempt to find out the cause of the crash.

Auto Crash Results In $50,000 Suit; Complaint Filed

Iantha Eddings, Butte Falls, has filed a complaint in circuit court asking $50,000 general damages and $3,000 special damages of Eva Mae Irwin and Frank Pierce Irwin, both Butte Falls, for injuries received in an automobile accident Nov. 16, 1956.

The accident occurred, according to the complaint, on U. S. Highway 199 in Del Norte county, Calif., approximately six miles north of Crescent City. The vehicle, owned by Mrs. Irwin, was being driven by Frank Irwin with the plaintiff a passenger in the automobile.

The complaint charges Mrs. Irwin with negligence for permitting Frank Irwin to operate her automobile when she had previous knowledge of his black-out spells. Frank Irwin, the complaint states, is charged with negligence and carelessness and careful lookout.

The plaintiff claims to have suffered severe injuries when the automobile in which she was riding left the highway and hit an embankment.

The plaintiff is represented by the Medford law firm of Neff, Frohnmayer, and Lowry.

North Syracuse, N.Y. — Policeman Francis E. Letterman arrested two suspected jewel thieves and took a satchel full of gems into custody. But he had to keep the jewels overnight until FBI agents could be notified in the morning. After some consideration, he finally took them home, stuck them under his bedroom bureau and went to bed. "But," said the weary-eyed officer the next day, "you just can't sleep with $250,000 worth of diamonds stashed away in your bedroom."

Miss Hanley Goes To Roseburg Meet

Miss Claire Hanley, Jacksonville, president of the Southern Oregon Historical Society, was in Roseburg last week where she attended a meeting of the Douglas County Historical Society.

At the meeting she stressed the value of a museum as a tourist attraction and mentioned the increased in tourist attendance at the Southern Oregon Historical Society's museum in Jacksonville. She stated that visitors from all 48 states and many foreign countries had visited the museum during the past year. The figures showed an increase of more than 700 visitors this year over 1956.

At the Roseburg meeting the Douglas county society was awarded possession of original records of the securing of the Veterans hospital for Roseburg and a copy of the pen used for signing over the hospital in 1930 by President Herbert Hoover.

Man Cleared of Manslaughter Charge

Genoa, Italy — An Italian American from Portland, Ore., who accidentally ran over his 90-year-old mother during a visit to his native land, was cleared of manslaughter charges Saturday by a Genoa court.

Nicosia Orossi, 63, was acquitted on grounds that his action "did not constitute a crime."

The verdict was by an appeals court. A lower court already had acquitted him on grounds of "lack of proof."
The accident happened June 9, 1956, a few days after Emigre Rossi returned to Italy for the first time in 43 years to introduce his wife and three children to his aged mother.
Rossi was reversing his car down the lane outside his mother's home at Cogoleto near Genoa when he ran over the aged woman and killed her.
Rossi did not attend the appeal hearing. The original trial was held Feb. 14.

Sno-Cats Rate High In Antarctic Work

Medford-made Tucker Sno-Cats are proving themselves in the Antarctic, according to word received by E. M. Tucker, president of the local manufacturing concern.

The over-snow vehicles are being used by polar expeditions of four nations, Great Britain, France, Belgium and the United States, in the current antarctic work. There are 52 of the vehicles in use now on that continent.

A cablegram received today from the British base at Shackleton said that a recent inland trail trip of 400 miles, with 60 miles of crevasses, started with one Sno-Cat and 4 "weasels." It returned with the Sno-Cat, but only one weasel.

Traction and performance of the Sno-Cats was excellent, the cablegram said, and added that in a few days the trans-polar expedition would be started, using Sno-Cats as well as other vehicles.

East Lansing, Mich. — Lichens, the greenish-gray plant growth often seen on trees, rocks and old plowed fields, are sensitive to the atmosphere and can be used to detect air pollution, according to Dr. Henry A. Imshaug, Michigan State university botanist.

Oils Pace Stocks to Higher Session Today

New York — Oils paced stocks higher for the fourth straight session today in moderate trading.

The list met support around noon after a lower opening. Individual gains ran to more than 2 points in a number of pivots, particularly in the oil group.

Gains of around 2 points or more appeared in Gulf Oil, Barber, Cities Service, Continental Oil, and Union Oil of California. There were a number of oils up around a point or more.

Lukens featured a mixed steel group with a gain of more than 2 at its high. Nonferrous metal issues came back sharply from their lows and ruled firm near the close. Chemicals also overcame earlier weakness to rule higher. Ford was the weak spot in the motors.

Rain in Laboratory

Moscow — The new newspaper Zarya Vostoka said today. Soviet scientists have produced rain clouds in the laboratory by use of radioactive elements.

A complex electrical and radiochemical process produced tiny droplets of water that grew and were transformed into rain clouds, the paper said. It said rain actually was made to fall from the clouds, produced in a special chamber under direction of scientist B. V. Deragina.
