IRBM Production To Pick Up Soon, McElroy Declares

Washington — Production of intermediate range ballistic missiles (IRBM) which eventually will ring Russia can begin to pick up steam almost immediately, authorities said today.

Defense Secretary Neil H. McElroy pulled the stops Wednesday when he informed Congress he had told both the Army and the Air Force to put their 1,500-mile range missiles into production. The missiles are the Air Force Thor and Army Jupiter.

In ordering the move McElroy reversed his own earlier intention to select only one of the two weapons which are designed for identical purposes. Possible answers

Some Defense Department experts were quick to view the McElroy move as a possible answer to critics who contend inter-service rivalry has been damaging. Within the short span of just two years, under heavy

Army, Air Force and industrial competition, the United States now has two IRBMs judged sufficiently advanced to be ordered into production. Many authorities doubt the IRBM program could have been that far advanced without the stimulus of competition.

On the heels of McElroy's disclosure to the Senate Preparedness subcommittee the Air Force announced its Thor is "already in production" and had been "for some time."

The Thor was understood to be coming from a Douglas Aircraft company assembly line at a rate of two a month. The rate probably can be increased to 10 a month very quickly and reach two or three dozen a month in a year's time.

The Army said it expects to put its Jupiter into production in a Chrysler Corp. plant "in a relatively short time."

Plans for Shelters Revived by Holifield

Washington — A House Government Operations subcommittee today revived plans for a multibillion dollar atomic shelter program. The plans were buried in the congressional economy drive last spring.

The subcommittee, headed by Rep. Chet Holifield (D-Calif.), disclosed it will try to revive the program in the light of Russia's spectacular successes in the missile and satellite fields. It scheduled hearings for early next year.

The subcommittee advised top military, atomic and civil defense officials to be ready to testify in late January or early February on a bill to create a new Cabinet level department of civil defense and make shelter construction one of its duties.

OIL LEASES

Any U. S. citizen, over 21, can profit in oil leases. Many people are doing so today. A $150 investment (plus $10 equipment fee) could be paying you tenfold every month within a year. Good, high potential oil and gas leases paid up for 3 years can be purchased for only $60 down. It's good speculation because current oil production of newly developing U.S. oil country is 14,000 barrels per day, expected 1958 production is 100,000 barrels per day. Leases available are in these oil producing regions. References: For information write to Wm. S. Barnes, 1017 AMERICAN BANK BLDG., Portland, Ore.
