Miss Cornell, in dress, was painted during 1924 run.

In 1924, when a young actress named Katharine Cornell exploded upon the theater world in a revival of "Candida," a less auspicious debut was made by the dress she wore in the role of the minister's wife. It was a bona fide debut, nevertheless, because the same silk dress was to appear with Miss Cornell in four subsequent revivals of Shaw's classic and again in the forthcoming movie version. Since she first wore it 33 years ago, Miss Cornell has had to let it out just one inch at the waist. Obviously, the durability of the dress is matched only by that of Miss Cornell herself.

In second revival (1933-34) Robert Harris took role of Marchbanks.
