Statues

Jane McHenry

Each player finds a partner, and the couples face each other, holding hands. At the command "GO!" from the player who is IT, they begin to swing in a circle. After a few seconds IT yells, "Statues!" The players instantly drop hands and "freeze" into whatever odd posture they happen to fall into. They stand as still as they can while IT selects the best "statue," and this winner becomes the next IT. Any "statue" that wiggles while the selection is being made is disqualified. This is just one version of a favorite old game.

Junior Treasure Chest

Edited by MARJORIE BARROWS, Editor of The Children's Hour

Take two half shells of an English walnut, as large as can be held between the brow and cheek. Ask your older brother or father to take a penknife and in the middle of each nut make a hole a bit larger than the pupil of your eye. Cover with a coat of white paint. Paint in iris of dark green around the pupil-hole, larger than a real eye. Leave a little white space on each half nut shell on upper left side (see illustration). Around the outer edges of the iris paint a thick black line. Paint irregular dabs of red around the edge of the shells. Open your eyes and raise your eyebrows high, put in both shells at once so that they cover each eye with the two points near the nose. Now go quietly and just look at your friends!!
