Many Actually Like To Work, Report Says Ann Arbor, Mich. — The University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research has released a report saying that many workers actually like to work. Researchers Rensis Likert and Stanley Seashore reported that "many common managerial practices imply that managerial skill consists of thinking up ways to seduce or else pressure employees into doing tasks which are inherently distasteful, or better yet, to invent a machine which displaces employees. "But a recent survey gave evi-
