

Rose Bowl Fever Hits Bums in Attempts to Use Stadium for Games

Los Angeles—The scent of roses was as strong as ever for the Los Angeles Dodgers following the failure of the Coliseum commission to agree upon a deal that would have given the National league club the use of the 105,000 seat stadium virtually rent-free.

The Dodgers already were dickering for use of the Rose Bowl in 1958 and 1959 and presumably will go ahead with negotiations with the City of Pasadena, barring a sudden change of heart by members of the Coliseum commission that would make use of that arena more attractive.

The commission, in a special session Friday, deadlocked 4-4 on a proposal to let the Dodgers use the Coliseum for two years, until they have a stadium of their own. Instead of rent, according to the proposal by President Jim Smith of the Coliseum commission, the Dodgers would guarantee the stadium $350,000 in income from concessions.

Opponents of Smith's proposal said it wouldn't be fair to other lessees, including the Los Angeles Rams, UCLA and USC football teams, who pay 10 per cent of the gate as rent.

Then, too, supervisors Burton Chace and Warren Dorn argued, the Coliseum would be unfair to act now, since the city of Pasadena already is dickering with Dodger President Walter O'Malley for the Rose Bowl.

Supervisor Kenneth Hahn made the motion that the Smith proposal be adopted, making two concessions in the process. He consented to go along with Donald P. Locker to mend the Smith proposal so there would be no consideration of beer sales in the Coliseum, and to insure the stadium remain in the hands of the management as presently constituted.

Hahn, G. E. Kenzie, Locker and Smith voted for the proposal. Chace, Dorn, Mrs. Harold C. Morton and Dr. Virling Kersey opposed it.

William Nicholas, Coliseum manager, said the commission could bring up the matter at some future meeting. But there was no date set for further discussion.

O'Malley indicated Wednesday he hoped negotiations for the Rose Bowl would be completed early next month.

Under the Smith plan, the Dodgers would have made up the difference if the stadium's 30 per cent of gross concession money fell below the $350,000 figure over the two-year period.

Smith also sought to meet O'Malley's objections to having home plate in the east end of the stadium by suggesting the diamond be turned so batters would not have to face the sun.

The Dodgers, making the move from Brooklyn, originally had planned to play some games in Wrigley Field here and the Coliseum. But Wrigley Field was ruled out as too small and the difficulty in settling on arrangements for the Coliseum caused O'Malley to turn to the Rose Bowl.

The initial cost of revamping the Coliseum, according to discussion today, was estimated at $128,000, excluding ground work for the playing diamond.

Win-Skein Ends With Loss Sat.

Lexington, Ky.—West Virginia upset North Carolina, the nation's No. 1 team, 75-64, Saturday night to snap the Tarheels' 37-game winning streak and win the University of Kentucky invitational basketball tournament.

The loss was North Carolina's first since it dropped the final game of the 1955-56 season to North Carolina State.

Atomic Reactor Frozen for Repair

Chicago—There was ice in Argonne Laboratory's boiling water atomic reactor recently, but it was no accident. One part of the reactor failed to function.

In order to get at the part, the scientists usually would have had to drain off quantities of radioactive water, remove the part, fix it, re-install it, put the dangerous water back in and go back to their chain reactions.

This seemed like a tortuous process to two engineers, William J. Kann and Charles F. Bullinger. They speculated that if they could dam off the water from the part, they would save at least two maintenance steps.

So they did—with dry ice and alcohol at minus 70 degrees.

By applying the frigid container at the right spot, they froze a 10-inch ice dam that sealed off the radioactive water permitting repairs to the part.

Atomic Sub Firm To Get Navy Award

Washington—General Dynamics Corp. will receive the Navy's certificate of merit today for producing the first atomic-powered submarine, the Nautilus.

The Navy said construction of the Nautilus, launched Sept. 30, 1954, was the "most difficult feat ever attempted by American technology."

The award will be presented by Rear Adm. M. E. Miles, commandant of the 3rd Naval District, to Carleton Shugs, manager of General Dynamics' electric boat division, at Groton, Conn., after commissioning of the Navy's third nuclear sub, the Skate.

The second atomic submarine, the Seawolf, was commissioned last March 30.

Californians Blackout on Pro TV Holds

Washington — The justice department said it couldn't help pro football fans in the San Francisco area who want to see the Western division championship game on television today.

Assistant Attorney General Victor R. Hansen, who is in charge of the department's anti-trust division, said Friday his investigators were looking into the contemplated local television blackout of the game between the San Francisco Forty Niners and Detroit Lions in San Francisco.

But an official said later they could discover no law or court decision to prevent the teams from going ahead with their plans to blackout the nationwide telecast within a radius of 150 miles.

He noted that several years ago the justice department and the National Football league filed in federal court a consent judgment outlining the rules to govern the telecasting of pro football games. The judgment followed a department inquiry into NFL TV practices.

But this official said that the decree specifically exempted playoff games from any court-imposed rules or regulations. Under such circumstances, he said, the TV or broadcasting rules are left strictly up to the teams themselves or to the league.

Faced with these legal barriers, he said, he could not see how the department could do anything before Sunday to alter the plans for telecasting the game.

Noted Pig's Grave Delays Highway

Anna, Ill. — When a farm animal faces a bulldozing rig, something's got to give even if the animal is a patriotic pig.

The farm animal is King Neptune, whose remains lie in the proposed route of a new highway. King Neptune helped raise 19 million dollars in World War II war bond rallies, according to owner Don Lingle.

The bulldozing rig is a piece of highway equipment that may go rumbling over King Neptune's last resting place if the highway is constructed.

Lingle protested the plans Friday. "I hate to stand in the way of progress," he said, "but this is sort of a sacred spot to me and one you hate to see plowed under by a bulldozer."
