

High School Girl Tells of Mission School Experiences

"I'm learning a lot more than just my studies, I'm learning how to get along with people from many nations," Miss Ruby Rowan said recently during an interview about her studies at Menaul school in Albuquerque, N.M.

Miss Rowan, a junior in high school, is attending the Presbyterian school in New Mexico that is supported by the board of national missions of the church. Miss Rowan, who spent two weeks at the school last summer during a Presbyterian youth work camp, liked the Southwest so much she returned in the fall to attend the regular session of school.

The student described the boarding school a "melting pot" as the 150 students there include Spaniards, Mexicans, Indians, and several students from Peru, Thailand, and Mexico, besides many of the states of the U.S.

Although her plans are not definite for this fall, she said that she expects to return to Medford High school for her senior year. Classes at the church supported school differ very little from public schools, she explained. Her schedule includes classes in home economics, chemistry, American history, English, and two classes a week each of physical education and Bible. The latter is a required course.

Class periods are about 55 minutes each, she added and said that each student is also required to work five hours each week for the school. This includes a variety of duties, she explained, such as waiting on tables at meals, which are served family style. These duties change, she added, so the students enjoy them.

Attendance at meals, as well as all classes, is required she reported but they are allowed one cut a week from breakfast.

Miss Rowan said that the students live in dormitories, majority of them two to a room. The campus has seven buildings, one of which is the dining hall where both boys and girls eat. She added that there are more boys than girls attending the school.

st. Medford, returned to Albuquerque Wednesday after spending the Christmas vacation with her parents. Last Sunday at the Westminster Fellowship meeting of the high school young people of the First Presbyterian church, Miss Rowan told of her experiences at the mission school. Earlier in the month the Fellowship sponsored a "slave day" where the members sold their personal services to pay for the round-trip ticket home for the holidays. More than $90 was raised by the group.

A display of old things, official church manuals, Bibles, hymn books, and art objects, was viewed by the members prior to the service. The Rev. H. A. Dierdorff, 79, retired Medford minister, was honored at the service as well as A. A. Davis, 423 Berrydale ave., and Mrs. Bert Rogers, 1424 Maple Park dr.
